Senate, House Units Told He Urged Company Men to 'Dodge.'

Messages Seeking Hearst Aid Read

Magnate Admits Calling for Campaign to Beat Holding Bill.

By Felix Bruner.

With Howard C. Hopson, utilities magnate, appearing successively before the House and Senate committees investigating lobbying, the inquiry yesterday brought out that:

Patrick J. Hurley, former Secretary of War and attorney for the Associated Gas & Electric Co., advised against appearance of representatives of the company before a House committee on the ground they might be "given the works" and asked questions they could not answer.

Hopson sent a series of telegrams to William Randolph Hearst discussing the utility bill and the New Deal generally and these telegrams were followed by editorials in the Hearst newspapers, bearing the signature of the publisher, using language almost identical with that used by Hopson.

Citizens of Ridgefield, Conn., signed telegrams opposing the Wheeler-Rayburn holding company bill and sent them to congressmen at the solicitation of a meter reader who was afraid he would lose his job. It also was charged that school children in Auburn, N. Y., were employed to solicit telegrams opposing the bill.

The Senate committee had received reports from 20 towns showing that of 31,580 telegrams concerning the bill, sent to congressmen, only 13 had been paid for by the senders.

At the same time, Senator Gibson (Republican), Vermont, a member of the Senate investigating committee, announced that he would demand that Marvin H. McIntyre, one of President Roosevelt's secretaries, be summoned to appear before the committee.

Reads Messages.

Gibson will ask McIntyre to explain his presence Wednesday night in the hotel room of B. B. Robinson, Associated Gas & Electric system lobbyist. With McIntyre and Robinson were Lawrence Wood Robert, Assistant Secretary of the Treasury, and Amon Carter, Texas publisher. They were discovered when Chesley W. Jurney, sergeant at arms of the Senate, went to Robinson's room in search of Hopson, on whom he wished to serve a Senate citation for contempt.

As Hopson appeared for the second time before the Senate committee, in accordance with a truce under the terms of which he will divide his time between the two committees, Chairman Black again took up the reading of numerous telegrams sent by the utilities magnate while he was in Florida during the first six months of this year. Most of them were signed "Duncan," the first name of Hopson's secretary, but Hopson admitted authorship. The Hearst messages were signed with Hopson's own name.

Feared to Appear Here.

Black, in questioning Hopson, brought out that he had produced a doctor's certificate to show that he was unable to appear before a New York court, but that at the same time the utility man, reputed to control the Associaed Gas & Electric System, was insisting on appearing before the House committee considering the Wheeler-Rayburn bill. Hopson finally did not appear before that committee. He admitted that he feared if he did appear he would be forced to testify before court in New York.

Behind the Senate committee as it conducted the inquiry was a huge chart showing the hundreds of companies controlled by the Associated holding company. Hopson testified that there had been much comment on the number of names on the chart and that he had been attempting to reduce the number through mergers.

Hopson also testified that he had "some trouble" with the General

THE PRESS CLUB "East Lynn"

STRONGER beer, it would seem, is indicated at the National Press Club these nights. They don't hiss enough . . . Up there, in one of the town's few cool spots, the same actors who, last year, made "The Drunkard" the talk of the town, are at present giving a rather swell performance of—of all things—"East Lynn" . . . You wander down that long corridor past a few desultorily ticking offices where correspondents of such eminent family journals as the Cincinnati Enquirer put on a rather good show of filing the wire . . . You pass that law office where the names take up a whole panel . . . You come to the anteroom of The Press Club's spacious ballroom . . . It's rather a good entrance, for you come in past the stage . . . That should put you in humor, seeing the stage through the wings . . . So . . . You take a place at the table and one of the wonders of the season is there for you to see . . . No, not "East Lynn," . . . No, not a large room half-full of half-full people . . . But, we mean, one Brownie . . . The spectacle of Brownie, who for years has served the Press Club's cardroom so faithfully, acting as an usher, is really worth the trip . . . Didn't think he had it in him . . . The room is something like the floor of Boston's Symphony Hall, where the Pops were made famous back in prewar days . . . Everybody sits at a table . . . The trouble is, they just sit . . . They should hiss more, and cheer more, and what are feet for if not to stamp with? . . . For, as "East Lynn" unfolds its tale of winter villainy and a woman wronged, with its songs and its scenes that should wreck the beery heart, they just sit . . . 'Smatter with Washington people? . . . Didn't they ever attend a Christmas Eve party of the Turnverein? . . . Yes, the beer should be stronger at the Press Club these nights . . . For here is the greatest opportunity to cry into one's beer Washington has had since they brought the bars into the open . . . And, believe it or not, the beer is free . . . So are the pretzels . . . So one sits there munching and guzzling and sighing when they sing, "When other hearts . . . and other lips . . . Can you remember muhee?" . . . A swell chance for some close harmony there! . . . True, last evening, when Sir Francis tried to "make" the blooming bride there were hisses . . . There should be more . . . And what a chance they miss when that silly gal warbles, "Gathering Up the Suh-hee Shells from the Suhea Shore" . . . A sibilantine celebration is indicated there . . . A grand chance to take down one's hair, to bridle up at villainy, to swell the heart with sentiment for honesty and decency . . . Free beer and pretzels . . . And the one place in Washington one can hiss without fear of an usher giving one the bum's rush . . . To hear the heroine say, "Take me away from this accursed place. Francis Levison" . . . To see the whatnots and the antimacassars on the parlor chairs . . . To wonder, if you will, that lines like those could once have been written and not in jest . . . To see what Design for Living was in 1885 . . . To hiss and boo and drink one's beer . . . Beer which, like the heart of the heroine, is, as the advertisements say, perfectly pure and reliable . . . It's "East Lynn," this week.

Banking Bill Is Salvaged By Congress

Groups Agree on Glass Amendments as End of Session Nears.

Test Vote on Coal Bill May Hinder Plans to Adjourn Tuesday.

By Robert C. Albright.

The Administration's banking bill, one of the larger stop-logs in the path of adjournment, last night was salvaged from the last-minute legislative jam, as Congress swept toward a belated "sine die" leave-taking probably next week.

The banking measure, revised substantially along the conservative lines advocated by Senator Carter Glass, was signed by House and Senate conferees, as the $250,000,000 tax bill, the major adjournment key, was shunted to conference. A banking report will be filed in both Houses before the week-end.

This left only one important barrier to adjournment next mid-week—the Guffey coal bill, setting up a miniature NRA to govern the soft coal industry. Sought by the President to test the Constitution's flexibility and to lessen mine labor unrest, the Guffey measure unexpectedly was assured of Senate consideration, as the House rushed through general debate on the bill toward a final vote probably Monday.

Glass Is Victor.

Despite numerous concessions to the House, Glass emerged from the long banking bill conference largely triumphant. His only major setback was conference elimination of his section relaxing present prohibitions against underwriting of securities by commercial banks. The President wanted the section stricken, and Glass was not insistent.

Highlights of other conference banking bill changes (details of which will be found elsewhere in this paper), were the following:

1. Name of Federal Reserve Board changed to "Board of Governors of Federal Reserve System," with the board comprising seven members appointed by the President, with the Secretary of the Treasury and the Comptroller of the Currency eliminated from membership. Senate provision for bi-partisan character of board and for two banker members, eliminated.

2. Senate provision for an open market committee comprising seven board members and five representatives of Federal Reserve banks retained, but the bank representatives chosen from specific districts.

3. Direct obligations of the United States, or obligations fully guaranteed by the Government, may be purchased only in the open market, as provided in the Senate bill.

4. Statutory requirements governing maintenance reserves against deposits by member banks could be changed only by vote of four members of the board, instead of five as in the Senate bill.

5. Director, officer or employes of a Reserve member bank would be permitted to serve as director in one other bank (interlocking-directorates), with the consent of Federal Reserve bank governors.

6. All State banks with deposits of $1,000,000 or more would have to join the Federal Reserve system by 1942, in order to get deposits insured, instead of by July 1, 1937, as in the Senate bill.

7. Authorized real estate loans by national banks not to exceed 40 per cent of appraised real estate value, instead of 50 per cent as in Senate bill.

8. Senate provision for 1-12 of 1 per cent annual assessment for membership in deposit insurance fund accepted, but eliminated temporary suspension of assess-

Glass Upheld By Conferees On Bank Bill

Managers of Both Hous Report a Compromise for Conservation.

Chiefs of Both Houses Drastically Modifying Eccles Plan Kept.

An Administration bank bill, drastically modifying centralizing tendencies of Reserve Board Governor Marriner S. Eccles' proposals, yesterday was unanimously reported by a little group of House and Senate conferees.

Complete agreement on a bill, largely as drawn by the Senate under the leadership of Senator Carter Glass, of Virginia, was reached after weeks of conference barter between Senate conferees, captained by the Virginian, and a House group led by Representative Henry B. Steagall, of Alabama.

In the end, Glass won out in most major details. He chuckled his satisfaction as reporters filed into the conference room, Steagall and others joined in the laugh.

On the insistence of the President and House conferees, Glass yielded on the Senate's relaxation in prohibitions against underwriting of securities by commercial banks. But aside from minor concessions on the character of the reconstituted Federal Reserve Board, on the eligibility of paper for discount and on some deposit insurance provisions, the Virginian was victorious again.

Senate Name Adopted.

In line with the Senate bill, it was agreed to rename the Federal Reserve Board "The Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System." The new board would comprise seven members appointed by the President.

But the conferees eliminated a Senate requirement that two members be of tested banking experience, and that no more than four members be of one political party. Both the Secretary of the Treasury an dthe Comptroller of the Currency would be eliminated as ex officio members of the board, as of February 1, 1936, instead of within 90 days, as in the Senate bill.

All membres of the reorganized board will be known as "Governors," while heads of the various Federal Reserve banks hereafter will be designated "presidents."

A new open market committee is set up largely as provided in the Senate bill. This group would comprise the seven members of the board and five representatives of the Reserve banks. The Senate bill would have permitted on of the latter to be selected at large.

As revised in conference, however, the five banker members of the committee would be chosen as follows: One from the Boston and New York districts, one from the Philadelphia and Cleveland area, one from Richmond, Atlanta and Dallas; one from Chicago and St. Louis, and one from the Kansas, Minneapolis and San Francisco area.

The Reserve banks, under the committee's recommendations, would have to buy Government obligations on the open market; the House bill would not have prevented purchases direct from the Treasury.

As a check on use of funds for speculation, statutory requirements governing maintenance of reserves against deposits by member banks could be changed only by a vote of not less than four of the seven Reserve board members. The Senate bill nad required a majority of five. The board could not lower reserve requirements, but it could double them.

Rate Every Ten Days.

As under the Senate bill, Reserve banks would be required to restate their reriscount rates every ten days, subject to approval or change by the board.

Minor modifications were made in the Senate bill's eligible paper provisions, permitting the Reserve banks to make loans on paper otherwise described as ineligible, but not for more than four months, and at a penalty of ½ of 1 per cent higher than the discount rate. The Senate bill had superimposed a 1 per cent penalty.

Provision for interlocking directorates under the Senate bill, permitting directors, officers or employes of a Reserve member bank to serve in similar capacity in one other bank, was retained, with the stipulation that such dual service be approved by Reserve bank governors.

The Senate measure had provided that all State banks organized after the bill becomes effective, and all now operating State banks with deposits of $1,000,000 or more, must join the Federal Reserve system by July 1, 1937, in order to get deposits insured, but the conferees altered this section. The requirement affecting State banks organized in the future was removed. The date by which going State banks with deposits over $1,000,000 would have to join was moved up to 1942.

Regarding real estate loans by national banks, the conferees changed the Senate bill so as to provide for such loans not to exceed 40 per cent of appraised real estate value, instead of 50 per cent.

The Senate bill had provided for assessment of 1/12 of 1 per cent annually for membership in the deposit insurance fund, but allowed discontinuance of assessments when the fund reached $500,000,000, until it was depleted by 15 per cent.

Point Barrow, Alaska, Aug. 16.—Death, reaching through an Arctic fog, overtook Will Rogers, peerless comedian, and Wiley Post, master aviator, as their rebuilt airplane fluttered and fell into an icy little river last night near this bleak outpost of civilization.

They had just taken off for a trifling 10-minute flight from their river position to Point Barrow. Sixty feet in the air the motor misfired. The plane heeled over on its right wing.

The lives of both the gentle master of the wisecrack and the champion aerial globe trotter were crushed out instantly as the impact drove the heavy motor back through the fuselage.

The bodies rested tonight in the Presbyterian Mission warehouse here, to be flown to Fairbanks by the flying friend of both men, Pilot Joe Crosson. Leaving Fairbanks [illegible], he said he hoped to return with the bodies tomorrow.

Ship Menaced by Ice.

The Coast Guard cutter Northland, ordered to return here to remove the bodies, wirelessed that the time of arrival was indefinite because westerly winds were forcing the ice pack too close to shore.

The cutter advised that the only feasible means for quickly removing the bodies was by airplane.

Dr. Henry W. Greist, medical missionary, said the rescue party reported "the plane debris was readily removed, as it was torn and broken to fragments by the plunge."

"The bodies," he said, "were dressed by Charles D. Brower, the 'king of the Arctic,' whom Rogers was flying to see, Sergt. Stanley R. Morgan, of the United States Army Signal Corps, and myself."

A terrified Eskimo ran 15 miles to Point Barrow with the news of the crash of the flying vacationists. Morgan dashed to the scene, recovered the bodies and brought word of the tragedy that shocked the world.

President and pauper alike expressed sorrow, for both men were known virtually the length and breadth of civilization.

Hours after the tragedy became known, relatives in the United States made arrangements with Col. Charles A. Lindbergh and other officials of the Pan American Airways to have the bodies returned home by airplane.

Dr. Greist said both men apparently had died instantly. Post's watch stopped at 8:20 p. m. (11:20 p. m. Eastern standard time).

Both Bodies Maimed.

"Both men's limbs were broken and both suffered severe head wounds when they were crushed in the wreckage," said Dr. Greist.

Rogers and Post had landed on the river when the Arctic fog had made them uncertain of their bearings on a 500-mile flight from Fairbanks to Point Barrow.

The Eskimo pointed ou the way. A few seconds after the take-off the plane's engine spluttered. The ship dropped into the river, striking first on its right wing and then nosing into the bank head-on.

"The Eskimo said he ran to the water's edge and called, but there was no answer," said Dr. Greist.

"Alarmed, he turned and ran the 15 miles to Barrow and informed Sergt. Morgan.

"The Eskimo was three hours running the 15 miles to Barrow over the rough tundra, with many small lakes to encircle and many streams to cross.

Italian Threat Of Occupation Stirs Selassie

Will Fight Subjugation; Makes New Offers to Pacify Duce.

By the Associated Press.

Paris, Aug. 16.—Emperor Haile Selassie tonight stated Ethiopia was willing to grant security to the Italian colonies on its borders, to give economic facilities and to make economic concessions to Italy, but would not accept military occupation.

These offers were made through the Ethiopian minister to Paris directly to the diplomats of Great Britain, Italy and France, gathered here by the impending Italo-Ethiopian hostilities.

The Emperor's offers were as follows:

1. An Ethiopian guarantee of the security of the Italian colonies of Somaliland and Eritrea and a similar guarantee for the security of Italians living in Ethiopia.

2. Ethiopia is willing to grant economic facilities for mining, road building and railroad operation.

3. Ethiopia may even grant more extensive agricultural concessions to Italy.

Will Fight Occupation.

Conference quarters stated, however, that the Emperor would not permit any military occupation of his nation.

A British spokesman said Baron Pompio Aloisi, head of the Italian delegation, was pressed for a "frank statement" of what Mussolini wants. He declined to give it but instead quit the meeting and telephoned Il Duce, "into whose lap the whole thing has now been dumped," the spokesman asserted.

After a full meeting of all three delegations, Premier Laval announced the day had been devoted to analyzing diplomatic documents, presumably treaties involved in the dispute, and that further discussions would be held tomorrow.

Ask Statement of Claims.

The British spokesman said: "The British and French want the Italians to state real claims against Ethiopia, for we have always felt they have legitimate claims arising from two sources, first, frontier troubles, and secondly, denial of the right to reasonable economic development.

"We feel if the Italians state their claims it will be found a very large part of them will be met freely by Ethiopia. In fact, Italy probably can attain a very large part of what she wants while retaining the friendship of Ethiopia, avoiding a breach with the French and British governments and the League of Nations, and without embarking on a very doubtful adventure."

Both Eden and Laval presented suggestions to Aloisi for a peaceful way of obtaining economic advantages in Ethiopia, officials said, but Aloisi neither accepted these nor explained what more Mussolini wanted.

Rome, Aug. 16 (AP).—Acceptance of any compromise in the Italo-Ethiopia controversy would be worse than losing the fight, the Roman press said tonight.

Editorials to this effect appeared along with new reports from Paris, where spokesmen for Italy, France and Britain are seeking a way to avoid open hostilities.

London, Aug. 16 (AP).—A big run of applicants for African war insurance sent the carrying charge for that risk up almost to 100 per cent today.

Naval Session Hopes Revived By British Step

By Franklyn Waltman, Jr.

Hope over prospects of a conference for the limitation of naval armaments to be held this fall increased measurably in official circles here yesterday as Great Britain sought the views of other maritime powers over the feasibility of convening such a meeting in October.

Several months ago officials were pessimistic over possibility that a conference would be convened this year to negotiate agreements to take the place of the Washington Arms Treaty, denounced by Japan and thus terminating on December 31, 1936, and the London Naval Treaty, which automatically expires on that date.

But the enterprise which the British have shown in recent weeks in seeking to bring about a conference has aroused a new optimism that something may be done to establish substitute limitation agreements and prevent an unbridled naval race.

Serious obstacles remain in the way of an agreement on limitation of naval armament and these have not yet been solved. Indeed, it is possible that a conference may be held without reaching an agreement, as happened at Geneva in 1927. But the progress that is being made toward bringing about a conference has been taken here as an indication that the difficulties toward an agreement are not insoluble.

Japan's demand for equality in armament with the United States and Great Britain, of course, remains the major stumbling block to a limitation agreement, just as it brought the London naval conversations of last fall to an impasse. But all powers have now become reconciled to the death of the ratio system of limitation and the search has been going on for a new formula.

The position of this Government remains unchanged. It may be authoritatively stated that this Government continues to stand unqualifiedly for naval disarmament and is ready to join any conference toward that end whenever the other sea powers regard the hour as propitious. But it is realized here that

Rogers' Estate Is Calculated At $2,500,000

Humorist Carried Million Insurance; Waived Double Indemnity.

By the Associated Press.

Hollywood, Aug. 16.—Will Rogers died wealthy—worth at least $2,500,000—and loved by his associates in the motion picture capital.

A bar against flying by film actors and indefinite delay in the release of two new pictures starring Rogers were seen as immediate effects of the Alaska airplane accident which killed the rope-throwing philosopher and Pilot Wiley Post.

The new pictures featuring Rogers are completed, but their disposition awaits the decision of Joseph Schenck, chairman of the board of directors, and Sidney R. Kent, president, of the Twentieth Century-Fox Studios in New York.

They are "In Old Kentucky" and "Steamboat 'Round the Bend," representing an investment of about $1,000,000. Studio officials said the precedent in such a case is to delay the release.

Only one member of Rogers' family and his two sisters-in-law were in southern California when word of his death reached here.

Will Rogers, jr., received the news as he was about to sail for two trips on the oil tanker W. M. Story as deckhand before returning to his classes at Stanford University.

The comedian's sisters-in-law, living next door to each other, are Mrs. A. M. Ireland and Mrs. L. H. Adamson.

"We are crushed," Mrs. Ireland said.

Mrs. Rogers, the other son, James, and daughter, Mary, were in Maine.

Dying Federal Agent Disables His Slayer and Aids in Capture

Nelson B. Klein, Justice Department agent, went down fighting last night at College Corner, Ohio, slain in a gun battle with an alleged automobile thief, J. Edgar Hoover, chief of the Bureau of Investigation, announced last night. He is the fourth agent to lose his life in the line of duty during the last two years.

The bullets that sent Klein to his death came from the gun of George Barrett, Hoover said. Barrett opened fire while being arrested by Klein and another agent before he had ascertained their identity.

As he was dying, the wounded man whipped out his revolver and fired several times. The alleged motor vehicle thief fell with several bullets in his legs and was captured by Klein's companion. He was removed to a Cincinnati hospital, 35 miles from the scene of the shooting, where he will be charged with the murder of a Federal officer, Hoover said.

Klein had been with the Division of Investigation since 1926 and was credited with the solution of a number of important cases. He was one of the men assigned to the Alice Berry Stoll kidnaping case at Louisville last October and was one of the first Federal men to investigate the reported appearance of Thomas H. Robinson, jr., in Springfield, following the abduction of the Louisville society matron.

Recently he is credited with having been largely instrumental in the rounding up of a gang of auto thieves who operated in Kentucky and Ohio. At the time of his death he was assigned to the Cincinnati office of the division.

Surviving him are his wife and three children with whom he lived at Southgate, Ky., just across the Ohio River from Cincinnati. All of the Department's agents will be invited, as in past instances, to contribute $10 each to the man's family. Aside from the small sum coming to them under the employe's compensation act, this is the only money they will receive unless Congress should act.

Klein is the ninth Division of Investigation agent to lose his life in line of duty since 1908. But four of them have been killed in the last two years. The reason for the recent increase in the rate is due, officials said, to the enlarged activities of the division.

Resolution Is Adopted at Request of Pittman, Committee Head.

By the Associated Press.

A Senate investigation of the effect of the Government's silver purchase program was ordered yesterday, with hearings to begin "immediately."

The hearing was authorized in a resolution by Senator Pittman (Democrat), Nevada, adopted with little debate. It served to circumvent a special investigation of the Treasury Department's operation of the 1934 silver purchase act sought by Senator Thomas (Democrat), Oklahoma, who has expressed dissatisfaction with the department's silver program. The committee was given $10,000.

At suggestion of Pittman, Thomas was included on the investigating committee, others being King (Democrat), Utah; Borah (Republican), Idaho, and McNary (Republican), Oregon.

Silver was the subject on two other fronts. The House shouted down a motion by Representative White (Democrat), Idaho, to have conferees on the tax bill accept an amendment attached in the Senate repealing the tax on silver transactions and repealing as well the act nationalizing the gray metal.

Metal Nearly Outlawed.

Some "silver" congressmen had appealed for the legislation as a means of permitting transactions in the metal in this country, virtually outlawed now by the 150 per cent transactions tax.

From New York, on the other hand, came intimations that the Treasury Department had steadied the price of silver at about 65¾ after it underwent a two-day slump of 2¾ cents. Banking opinion was that recent Treasury purchases of more than 25,500,000 ounces of silver had sucked up most of the immediate offerings in Europe and the Far East.

In outlining the scope of the silver investigation, Pittman said the members first would confer with the Secretary of the Treasury.

"We can find out in two or three days how the act is being administered," he said.

He expected the committee members would remain in Washington long enough after adjournment to complete that. Subsequently, he added the committee would study the effect of the silver purchase program on imports and exports, on prices here and abroad and on international exchange.

Long-Term Policy.

He said the aim of the silver purchase act was to put a big load of silver in the Treasury which might later be used in dickering for international stabilization of currency on terms suitable to this country.

The silver purchase act announced as its goal the collection in the Treasury of a quantity of silver equal in value to one-third of the gold in the United States, an amount estimated by Senator Thomas at $3,000,000,000. Approximately $2,000,000,000 now is in the Treasury. As an alternate the act provided that purchasing toward the ultimate goal should continue as long as the price remained below $1.29 an ounce.

Thomas has complained bitterly that instead of forcing the price upward the Treasury has at times dumped silver on the market to depress prices.

"What we want is facts about the matter," Pittman summarized as the aim of the resolution. "There are statements that pushing up the price of silver has shut China out as a customer for American cotton and tobacco. There are other factors entering into that, but this committee should gather information which will answer such assertions."

Disorder Charge Jails FHA Official

Under charges of intoxication, disorderly conduct and assault, James Trimble, jr., 34, former acting head underwriter for the Washington office of the Federal Housing Administration, was in the District Jail last night, awaiting trial in Police Court August 28.

Trimble, son of James Trimble, vice president of the National Bank of Washington, was arrested last week on complaint of Albert G. Drane, 77, 1800 block of Kilbourne street northwest, retired War Department bureau chief.

Judge Isaac R. Hitt, in Police Court, recommended the younger Trimble be sent to Gallinger Hospital for treatment. According to testimony in Police Court, Trimble went to the Drane home, struck Drane, knocked off his glasses and threatened his wife, an invalid. He was arrested by Tenth Precinct police.

New York, Aug. 16 (AP).—Greenberg Publishers, Inc., were held for Special Sessions Court following a hearing today in Magistrate's Court on charges of having published an indecent book—"Ladies in the Parlor," by Jim Tully.

Magistrate Jonah Goldstein in his decision held that "the pages of the book are replete with lascivious matter."

The proceedings were brought by an agent of the Society for the Suppression of Vice.

U. S., Panama Reach Accord For New Pact

Details Are Kept Secret by Hull; Will Be Concluded Next Month.

By the Associated Press.

Secretary Hull announced yesterday the Panama Commission and the State Department had authenticated agreements covering the main questions under negotiations for a new basic treaty.

He did not disclose the nature of agreements reached, but said the Panama commissioners would proceed to their capital to report the accomplishments and meet again in Washington with Assistant Secretary of State Sumner Welles to conclude the treaty when the latter returns from a trip to Europe.

The State Department declined either to confirm or deny published reports that the United States no longer would guarantee Panama's independence or to readjust the annual $250,000 rental payment to Panama on the old gold dollar standard as specified in the original treaty of 1903.

Senate Blocks Pay For Gen. Mitchell

Military Unit May Consult President on Vetoes.

By the Associated Press.

Brig. Gen. William Mitchell, retired, whose stormy criticism of the Army Air Service a decade ago led to his court-martial, yesterday was shut off, in the Senate, at least temporarily, from full retired pay.

A bill supported by the Military Committee, was blocked by Senator Hastings (Republican), Delaware, on the ground that it should be brought up sometime when it could be exposed to liberal debate.

Majority Leader Robinson recounted Mitchell's record and said no officer ever had a more brilliant one.

At about the same time the bill was being blocked in the Senate, Senator Sheppard (Democrat), of Texas, chairman of the Military Committee, said his group was considering a visit to the White House to talk over with President Roosevelt his consistent vetoing of bills to clear the records of former service men who were dishonorably discharged.

The purpose of such bills is to "correct" records of soldiers so that they could be eligible for pension benefits.

Sheppard said yesterday the President had been "vetoing these bills under the influence of the War Department without considering the committee's recommendations."

Sheppard insisted the President should be given an opportunity to "exercise his own will in the matter when supplied with full information such as is in the hands of the committee.

Clipper Completes Wake Island Hop

By the United Press.

Midway Islands, Aug. 16.—Pan-American Airways' great clipper plane slid to an easy landing at Wake Islands, 1,240 miles west of Midway, at 9:29 p. m. (Eastern daylight time) today to complete a record flight from Alameda, Calif.

The clipper, crossing the International Date Line en route to the mid-Pacific group of three tiny, sandy islets, made the trip in 8 hours 8 minutes.

It was the first time an airplane ever crossed the Pacific between Honolulu and Wake, formerly uninhabited atoll where a modern air landing and radio station have been installed. The Clipper, piloted by R. O. D. Sullivan and carrying seven other men, rode an arrow-true course to its objective, following the powerful radio directional beams of the Midway and Wake stations.

RevoltCrushed, Albania Calms

Army Inspector Is Listed Among Casuals; Deaths Estimated at 60.

By the Associated Press.

Tirana, Albania, Aug. 16.—An official communique said tonight all is calm in Albania, with an attempted revolt "crushed."

Police Lieut. Musa Kraja and a journalist named Chekrezi, the statement said, headed the movement. They escaped, but many others have been arrested.

The revolt was said to have started at Fieri and Gen. Leon de Gagliardi, inspector of the army, who was passing through the town when the outbreak occurred, and his chauffeur were the first victims.

Kraja, backed by police and disgruntled civilians, the communique continued, marched to Lushnja, where police remained loyal and held off the rebels until reinforcements arrived.

60 Reported Killed

By the Associated Press.

Athens, Aug. 16.—Refugees arriving in Greek territory shortly after the Greco-Albanian border was closed, reported today that a revolt against King Zog of Albania had broken out. They said 60 persons were killed in a battle south of Tirana.

The newspaper Telegraf of Vienna published a dispatch from Skoplje, Yugoslavia, saying the assassination had touched off a revolution throughout Albania.

In South Albania national troops and rebels met in a sharp engagement, the dispatch said, and the revolters are in control of the region.

Frontiers Reopened

By the Associated Press.

London, Aug. 16.—A Reuters News Agency dispatch from Belgrade tonight said Albanian frontiers had been reopened, apparently after the government succeeded in restoring order.

It was estimated unofficially, the dispatch said, that 50 rebels were killed and 11 of the government forces.

Head of Austria's Sports Rules Break With Reich

Vienna, Aug. 16 (U.P.).—Vice Chancellor Prince Ernst Rudiger von Starhemberg, Austria's "supreme sports leader," today ordered all sports relations with Germany severed immediately.

He said his order was issued because of violent attacks on the Austrian government by the Voelkischer Beobachter of Munich, official organ of the National Socialist (Nazi) Party.

Roosevelt Sets Parleys to Aid Congress Close

Leaders Will Be Called to White House on Return of President Today.

By the Associated Press.

Hyde Park, N. Y., Aug. 16.—President Roosevelt was arranging tonight for a series of conferences beginning Sunday at the White House to guide Congress on remaining important Administration bills.

Coming home to keep a long-standing promise to attend the twenty-first birthday party of his third son, Franklin, jr., Mr. Roosevelt, nevertheless, had a good share of thoughts for the strenuous working Congress, which is at the crucial stage on several major measures.

In a talk with newspapermen as he left his train here, the President significantly declined comment on the tax measure passed yesterday by the Senate carrying a couple of riders, including one on silver control.

He remarked that the tax bill was not through Congress.

Replying to inquiry, he also said he certainly did hope to see the utility holding company regulation bill become a law at this session.

Mr. Roosevelt is obviously content to see the weary legislators bring their work to an end as quickly as possible and is ready to co-operate to this end.

Stating his purpose to leave tonight for the Capital, Mr. Roosevelt said he probably would see various groups beginning tomorrow, checking up on the status of legislation to see just where things stood.

He said he expected to name the new National Labor Board Monday and to appoint the important Social Security Board early in the week.

W. F. Callender Made Triple-A Assistant

Employe for 30 Years Is Given New Assignment.

Appointment of William F. Callander as assistant administrator of the Agricultural Adjustment Administration was announced by Secretary Wallace yesterday. Callander has been with the Department of Agriculture since 1905 in charge of the Division of Crop and Live Stock Estimates of the Bureau of Agricultural Economics for 12 years, acting as chairman of the Crop Reporting Board.

He was secretary to Secretary of Agriculture David F. Houston from 1913 to 1915 and has been with the crop estimating service almost continuously since that time.

Joseph A. Becker has been appointed to succeed Callander in charge of the Division of Crop and Live Stock Estimates and has been designated chairman of the Crop Reporting Board by Secretary Wallace. Becker has been doing crop reporting work in the department since 1918, when he was appointed from Wisconsin.

As assistant administrator, Callander will co-ordinate activities of the various commodity divisions of the Administration insofar as the contract programs are concerned.

Mexican Gunboat Seizes 15 U. S. Fishing Craft

San Pedro, Calif., Aug. 16 (AP).—Van Camp Seafood Co. officials said tonight they had received a radio message that 15 California tuna fishing boats have been seized by a Mexican gunboat off the coast of Lower California.

Juan Duarte, Mexican fish and game commissioner in San Diego, said the tuna clippers had been freed at noon today, but that he had no other information.

Heat Will Continue; One Overcome Here

Cloudy, sultry weather, with slight change in the temperature, will prevail in the District today, the forecaster predicted last night. There is a possibility that showers may fall this afternoon, the Weather Bureau said.

Yesterday's maximum heat of 89 felled one Washingtonian and caused widespread suffering. Paul Hanes, 26, of the Franklin Park Hotel, a clerk in a cigar store at Fourteenth street and New York avenue, was overcome at work. He was treated at Emergency Hospital, where physicians said his condition is not serious.

3,746 Workers Draw $800,000 NRA SCalaries

Sen. Vandenburg Protest Brings Admission From Official.

By the Associated Press.

A renewed protest by Senator Vandenberg (Republican), Michigan, against the Administration's failure to "demobilize" NRA brought a disclosure yesterday that 3,746 employes remain on its pay roll at about 800,000 a month.

The number includes 208 who have received dismissal notices which will cut off their salaries within the next two or three weeks.

M. Creditor, an administrative assistant of the "skeletonized" Blue Eagle unit, said that 2,009 NRA workers had lost their jobs since the Supreme Court held NRA unconstitutional in the Schechter case May 25.

3,300 in September.

"While it's wild guessing," Creditor said, "by the end of September we probably will be down to a semipermanent basis with about 3,300 employes and a monthly administrative cost of about $775,000." 5shrdlu cmfwyp cmfwyp cmfwypm

He explained that NRA's future size will depend in part upon whether congressional action is completed on the Walsh bill, requiring Government contractors to live up to NRA standards, and upon progress toward voluntary code agreements.

Vandenberg, protesting against consideration of a bill to establish a national planning board of five members at salaries of $12,000 each, called the Senate's attention today to NRA figures which he inserted in the Record yesterday.

These showed that in July, six weeks after the Supreme Court had acted, NRA had 3,943 employes who received $845,253 in salaries, with a total administrative cost of $1,017,127.

This compared with NRA's 4,678 employes in July, 1934, who received $714,764 in salaries, with a total administrative cost of $887,046.

Calls it Outrageous.

"It's outrageous," Vandenberg told reporters. "Here is a bureau knocked out by the Supreme Court which is costing nearly $200,000 more than it did when it was going strong."

The Michigan Republican said he had discussed the situation with other Senators, but they had decided there was nothing they could do about it "except leave it to the conscience, if any, of the Administration."

Creditor confirmed Vandenberg's figures, but insisted that NRA was "just starting into its stride in July, 1934." He said the administrative cost last May was $1,253,000, and in June, $1,175,000.

NRA still has no boss. The resignation of James L. O'Neill as administrator was effective July 31.

Air Safety Inquiry Proposed in House

Motion Covers Rates and Law Compliance.

By the Associated Press.

Representative Mead (Democrat), New York, yesterday introduced a resolution calling for an investigation to determine whether companies handling air-mail have provided adequate safeguards for air-mail and passengers.

The resolution proposed to authorize the committee to investigate also:

Methods adopted by the Interstate Commerce Commission to determine fair and reasonable rates of compensation for transportation of air-mail.

Things as They Are

Can We Legislate Security? New Law May Be Unconstitutional; Red Tape Feared.

By Samuel Crowther.

IT is not captious to inquire whether the Social Security bill is really what it seems to be. The promise that protection can be made by law against the rigors of old age, sickness and unemployment is very attractive. Our advanced social thinkers announce that this bill is a great step forward that will benefit from 25 to 30 million people. The question that must be asked is whether or not the thought of this bill is in advance of the facts and whether it will benefit anybody.

The recommendation that it is in accord with the best European thought and practice is far from exact. But even if that were so, shall we gain or lose by revising the American system to be in accord with the best European practice? For those are the practices which we through the years have steadily tried to avoid.

Security has not been and is not now the principal objective of most Americans. The American wants opportunity and he instinctively knows that opportunity and security do not go together. The European peasant values security and he tries to obtain it by grubbing a bit of land. The ideal of the French peasant is really the ideal of the subsistence farms which the Government is setting up and which are being received without marked enthusiasm, for the reason that few Americans, in spite of their present lack of funds, are willing to consider a future which, at the best, holds only a mere sustenance.

The bill may or may not be constitutional. It is certainly awkward and presents unlimited opportunities for being lost in red tape. It may even degenerate, through the provision that all the funds be invested in Government securities, into a device for sheltering the public debt and avoiding the necessity of balancing the budget. These points are material. But they have essentially to do with detail.

The real point is whether, if the bill were perfect, its results would be social or anti-social. Security is a word of many meanings. If we think of security as connecting the sort of life in which no one ever slips back, we are thinking of something which it is not in nature to get. If we think of security as an existence on the plane of mere sustenance, we are thinking of something which it may or may not be possible to get. But that is the kind of security which few Americans want.

The reason we do not have more, the reason involuntary poverty exists, is that never yet has there been enough of the good things of life to go wholly around. I emphasize the word "involuntary" because a certain amount of poverty is voluntary and can be cured only by forcing the voluntary paupers to work.

* * * *

Insurance involves no magic, but is a plain matter of savings and investment in order to create a fund to meet a future contingency. We cannot save unless there is something left over after our daily needs are met. We can not invest unless someone is willing to hire our money.

The most that a law can do is to provide machinery for collecting and investing the money; that is, the Government sets up as an insurance company, and it can do no more than a private insurance company except that, when its outgo exceeds its income, it can tax to make up the deficit. If it taxes to make up the deficit, then it further assesses earnings and presses down the standard of living.

Many young men buy more insurance than they are capable of paying for and eventually have to make a choice between cutting their living expenses to the bone or dropping some of their insurance. The whole matter of insurance gets down to the percentage of current income which it is wise to set aside for the future. Responsible life insurance agents no longer sell a man all the insurance they can persuade him to take in order to get heavy commissions. They have found that it pays best to sell an amount of insurance which does not cut into the man's scale of living, for then he will be able to invest in himself and go forward to larger policies.

* * * *

It is quite the same with the Nation. During the first enthusiasm of the German republic, social schemes were adopted so freely that the workman found himself giving up 16 per cent of his wages. The contributions under our bill will eventually amount to nearly 10 per cent of wages. The contributions must come out of wages. They can not come out of profits, for there are not enough profits. If they are added to prices, then they indirectly come out of wages by reducing purchasing power. It remains to be seen whether so large a percentage of purchasing power can be diverted without cutting consumption in many important lines—and causing unemployment.

The unemployment insurance feature is not of present moment, for it will take many years to accumulate enough to make worthwhile payments. We do not know enough about unemployment to set up insurance; the payments under the bill are only savings against an unknown contingency.

It is feasible for corporations to set aside human depreciation reserves and to pension employes. That is being done on a large scale. It is feasible to care for most human suffering through charity. The big question is to prevent depressions and unemployment and not to accept them.

This bill, as someone has said, may be the building of a fire escape of such weight as to pull down the wall.

ments when fund reached $500,000,000.

9. Provision for Federal Reserve Bank loans on paper otherwise described as "ineligible" under penalty of ½ of 1 per cent higher than discount rate, instead of 1 per cent higher as in Senate bill.

Pressure Exerted.

With the banking bill now in agreement, and the tax bill safely in conference at last, the Administration opened what may prove a futile drive to force through the Guffey bill before members buy their tickets home.

Surprising pressure was exerted to force the bill to enactment, over constitutional doubts of members of both houses, with the result that midweek adjournment plans may have to be discarded.

Senate Majority Leader Joseph T. Robinson, however, set Tuesday night as the earliest possible date Congress can get away, and Thursday night as the latest. As soon as the House passes the Guffey measure, he said, he will move for Senate consideration.

Record-Breaking Speed.

While the House plugged away at the Guffey bill yesterday, after sending the $250,000,000 tax measure to conference, the Senate passed a host of minor bills with record-breaking speed, and made the controversial Frazier-Lemke farm moratorium bill, enacted in different form last session but invalidated by the Supreme Court, its unfinished business.

After eight strenuous months of legislating, members of both sides of the Capitol apparently were seized by a bad attack of adjournment fever. Minor bills were adopted during yesterday's six-hour Senate session with the abandon usually shown by a Congress on its way home.

Robinson made clear to the Senate nevertheless that the line will have to be drawn somewhere. He indicated some legislation necessarily must go over until next term if Congress is to wind up its business.

Seizing the opportunity, Republican Leader Charles L. McNary pressed Robinson on his program plans, but the majority leader refused to be committed.

"It is my feeling we ought to adjourn as soon as we can get through with these conference reports," declared McNary.

It was here that Robinson responded with:

"I think we ought to get through by Tuesday night, and certainly not later than Thursday."

Doubts Are Raised.

Robinson's announcement, on the other hand, that he will move, as soon as the House passes the Guffey bill, for the Senate to take up the storm-torn measure raised serious doubts in the minds of some Senators.

There are a number of Senate conservatives who would rather prolong the session indefinitely than allow the Guffey bill to pass. Some of these saw in the Robinson step a move to set up a Senate "buffer" against unwanted measures that might be pushed in the closing days of Congress.

Another measure, for which railroad labor is strongly pressing, was placed on Robinson's zero-hour calendar—the railroad pension bill, enacted last session, but held unconstitutional by the Supreme Court. It has been revised along Constitutional lines, and favorably reported by both the Senate and House Interstate Commerce Committees.

Tax Conferees Named.

Despite major differences between tax measures passed by House and Senate, notably in the House inheritance impost eliminated by the Senate, leaders felt certain of an early agreement on the substance of President Roosevelt's wealth-taxing recommendations.

In sending the bill to conference the House appointed the following conferees: Doughton, North Carolina; Samuel Hill, Washington, and Cullen, New York (Democrats), and Treadway, Massachusetts, and Bacharach, New Jersey (Republicans).

The same conferees were designated on the Federal alcohol control bill, also in conference. Conferees met last night on that measure and are expected to proceed today with their tax problems.

Other bills still in conference include the Administration's much-sought TVA amendments, and the utility holding company elimination bill—the latter apparently hopelessly deadlocked for this session, anyway.

At yesterday's utilities conference compromises on the holding company "death sentence" were discussed, involving salvation of holding companies only one degree removed from an operating utility, but apparently got nowhere. It was significant that Senator Burton K. Wheeler (Democrat), Montana, chief "death sentence" advocate, pointed out that when Congress convenes again next January, the bill will still have conference seniority, if nothing is done this session.

Georgia Road Truce Is Sped By Roosevelt

Early Release of Federal Funds Due as Result of Letter.

By the Associated Press.

A letter received yesterday by Representative Cox, of Camilla, Ga., from President Roosevelt said that as soon as the "adequacy" of the Georgia highway department was cleared up the State's Federal road aid could be released.

"Any very small amount necessary to cover a few projects on which agreement may not be reached," the President wrote, "can properly be reserved for later discussion. The great bulk of the funds can be spent."

Would Call a Truce.

This provision would call a truce on the disputed Balls Ferry Bridge, and in this instance would adopt a proposal of Senator George (Democrat), Georgia, to compromise differences between Gov. Talmadge's highway board and the Federal Roads Bureau, which resulted in the impounding of $19,000,000 of Federal highway money allotted to Georgia.

The President's letter to Cox follows:

"I have the letter of July 22 signed by yourself and seven of your colleagues.

"The highway issue in Georgia is a very simple one. The sole question is the adequacy of the State highway organization to provide plans and to supervise the expenditure of some $19,000,000. The money is available. The Secretary of Agriculture must under the law be satisfied as to the adequacy of the highway department. As soon as this matter is cleared up in accordance with the responsibility vested in him, the work can begin.

Urges Speedy Action.

"Any very small amount necessary to cover a few projects on which agreement may not be reached, can probably be reserved for later discussion. The great bulk of the fund can be spent.

"Because the work relief fund is meant to provide immediate employment, the Secretary of Agriculture will request the State highway department to reply promptly as to its decision. I hope, of course, that the State highway organization can quickly be made adequate to plan and supervise the building of the road."

Cox commented on Mr. Roosevelt's letter as follows:

"The President has directed proper procedure on the part of the Bureau of Roads. It is to be hoped that Mr. MacDonald (Federal Roads Bureau chief) and the Secretary of Agriculture will approach consideration of the problem in sympathetic manner and will be met by the highway board in similar spirit.

"There can be no excuse for continuing this quarrel any longer."

3 Children at Play Killed by Landslide

2 Who Escaped Unable to Rescue Companions.

Pawtucket, R. I., Aug. 16 (AP).—Three children were killed late this afternoon in the cave-in of a bank under which they were playing.

Two other children, caught in the landslide, were able to dig themselves out. They tried to save their companions but were unable to reach them.

Firemen failed to revive the victims after rescuing them from under 3 feet of gravel. They were identified as Leo Bodell, 8, Kenneth Bedford, 8, and David Lambert, 7, all of Pawtucket. Ruth, 9, and Edward Bedford, 7, brother and sister of Kenneth, were saved.

Bill Passed to Spur Tourist Trade of U. S.

By the Associated Press.

"See America First" will be a familiar slogan throughout the world, if a bill passed yesterday by the Senate and sent to the House finally becomes law.

The measure introduced by Senator Copeland (Democrat), New York, would set up a commission to encourage travel to and within the United States by foreigners. The Commerce Committee, in reporting the measure, said $8,000 was spent by American tourists abroad for every $1,000 by foreigners in this country.

Nazis Instruct Aryan Dealers In Jewish Curb

Say They Must Improve Service to Take Trade From Proscribed.

By the Associated Press.

Berlin, Aug. 16.—The official Nazi party economic press service frankly warned merchants today that the campaign against Jewish business firms may fail if Gentile stores do not improve their service.

In a communication to Aryan firms the service said:

"Do not think numerous Germans make their purchases at Jewish shops merely from meanness or childish obstinacy." It pointed out that "other considerations enter" and advised adoption of the American principle "the customer is always right."

One trouble, the economic service continued, is that Aryan firms believe they have a monopoly merely because by party command nobody is to buy at Jewish stores.

U. S. Slogan Approved.

"Unfortunately," it continued, "a majority of the purchasers are so constituted that if they do not find what they want in a German store, they will not simply buy a substitute. They had rather go to a Jewish shop, where they know they can get exactly what they are looking for. This viewpoint may be reprehensible, but it must be recognized as fact. It cannot ever be stamped out.

"Even in dealing with difficult customers, one must show the necessary patinece * * * furthermore, it will not do for certain goods, like fashion novelties, silks, etc., to be obtainable in first-class quality almost exclusively in non-Aryan shops.

"In the United States, which before the national revolution we imitated in such a ludicrous manner, there is one principle which as an exception really deserves emulation, namely: 'The customer is always right.'

More Jews Manhandled.

"Fortunately, we haven't such capricious customers as one finds in America. All the more ought the customer be told he is right when he complains of an alleged fault. That is worth while. The Jew knows that trick."

While the anti-Jewish addresses of Julius Streicher last night were followed by no disturbances in Berlin of any sort, dispatches from Nordhausen reported two cases of "popular indignation" being vented against Jews.

A Hebrew merchant was dragged out of his house by an angry crowd which claimed he had tried to seduce Aryan girls. He was made to parade through the city and was finally turned over to police for "protective custody."

A Jewish cattle dealer who was accused by the crowd of cheating farmers, likewise was made to parade through the city and then handed to police.

Hopson Meets Reporters After House Inquiry

Howard C. Hopson, in center, seems to be enjoying the informal press conference he held yesterday following his appearance befor e the House Rules Committee.

Motors Corporation because he had used its name in an advertisement listing purported holding companies.

Questioning concerning Hurley centered on his visit to Miami last March to see Hopson. The witness at first declared the visit was not in connection with the Wheeler-Rayburn bill. After more telegrams were read he admitted it was in connection with the bill.

After Hopson had been confronted with the telegrams, Black had the stenographer read Hopson's previous testimony. Hopson at first insisted the stenographer was in error. Later he said he had not understood the question. He apologized to the stenographer.

A telegram to Hopson from his New York office quoted Hurley as saying "we will get the works if an appearance is made." The telegram told Hopson that Hurley was putting "too much stress on heckling," but pointed out that "the committee doesn't know much about the bill anyhow." The telegram said Hurley appeared to have some fear "of our side of the story."

The audience laughed as Black read from the telegram that "Hurley needs a pep talk badly."

"Did he?" Black asked.

"He did," said Hopson.

"You gave it to him, didn't you?"

"I did."

"Did Hurley come to Miami to talk to you about the Wheeler-Rayburn bill?"

"That is the direct opposite of the fact?"

"What was the fact?"

"He came down to have me talk to him."

Obtains Hearing.

Hopson said Hurley later obtained a hearing for the Associated Gas & Electric system before the House committee.

Many of Hopson's telegrams referred to individuals by initials. One referred to "Sam and Henry." He said this reference was to Moses and Singer, New York lawyers.

Black then had Hopson name the lawyers for the company. He recited a long list.

"How about Mr. O'Connor?" asked Senator Gibson (Republican), Vermont, a member of the committee.

"Oh, yes," said Hopson. "Basil O'Connor. He was one of our lawyers."

"You had forgotten him?"

"Yes."

Basil O'Connor is a brother of Representative John J. O'Connor, chairman of the House Rules Committee, charged with the lobby investigation.

In one of the telegrams the name of Robinson appeared. Hopson said his company was paying Robinson's expenses in his fight against the holding company bill and that it expected to pay him more later.

Hopson said that Robinson was employed to "state the facts" to members of Congress and "others who might have influence."

Black then went into the Hearst editorials.

One message to Hopson's New York office complained of an article written by Arthur Brisbane, Hearst editorial writer. Later messages were addressed to Hearst at San Simeon, Calif. The first was dated May 31, 1935.

This message told Hearst that Hopson hoped the publisher would do his utmost "to prevent dictatorship" in the United States. Hopson told Hearst that he understood there would be a series of announcements following adverse rulings of the Supreme Court on NRA legislation.

Later Black introduced into the record an editorial appearing in the New York American and signed by Hearst warning against the danger of dictatorship as a result of proposed New Deal moves. The wording was almost identical with that of Hopson's telegram to the publisher.

Hopson's message to Hearst said:

"Hope you will do your utmost to prevent possible attempt at dictatorship, which seems to many to be forecast by the suggestion that there will be a series of announcements as to proposed course of action to meet the crisis which defeated New Dealers alleged is about to occur as a result of the Supreme Court's decision."

The editorial was headed:

"Which—American Democracy or Personal Dictatorship?"

The first paragraph said:

"The latest decisions of the Supreme Court should arouse all loyal American citizens to a full realization of how entirely the so-called Democratic Administration in Washington has abandoned Democratic principles and how utterly it has discarded the fundamental Democratic policy and the fundamental American constitutional policy of strict limitation of Federal powers."

Hopson also told Hearst that he believed his readers should be "educated on the harm of the Wheeler-Rayburn bill." Hopson said Hearst editorials were very friendly to the utility stand against the bill and that as a result he had increased his advertising in the Hearst newspapers.

The second telegram, dated June 7, covered three typewritten pages. The message quoted President Roosevelt as telling newspapermen that there was no such thing as "must" legislation, but that there was desirable legislation.

Hopson told Hearst that the President's contention that the utility bill was desirable was "silly."

"Are the President's statements sincere?" Hopson asked the publisher. "Does the New Deal desire recovery or is it merely giving lip service to cover destructive legislation?"

Hopson told Hearst that he was afraid some business people would be deceived by the "fair words" of the President. He said he felt there would be no real let-up in the White House pressure for reform legislation. Hopson then went into a long discussion of the Wheeler Rayburn bill. The telegram ended with the statement:

"The foregoing is for your information in view of your helpful editorials."

"Were you ever an editorial writer directly?" Black asked.

"No, I never wrote an editorial directly or indirectly that I know of," Hopson said.

"Did you send any message to any other publications or publishers?"

"I don't recollect any."

The next message to Hearst was dated June 11. Hopson told the publisher that he appreciated his editorials.

Hopson declared in the message that the utilities bill represented merely the beginning of an attack on all holding companies and the beginning of an attack on mere bigness.

"I am sorry to see that both California Senators are anti-investor," he concluded.

On June 28, Hopson again telegraphed to Hearst that he believed "if a vigorous effort could be made to encourage congressmen to resist pressure and bullying, the bill could be defeated in the House."

Hopson was asked if he had suggested to his employes that they send messages of congratulation to Senators who voted against the bill.

Hopson replied that he had suggested that Senator Moore (Democrat), New Jersey, should be congratulated "for his outspokenness."

Gadsden Comments.

Hopson testified that "somebody" had told him that the United Mine Workers of American were strongly opposed to the bill. He added that in spite of pressure by labor leaders, Senator Guffey (Democrat), Pennsylvania, had voted for the measure.

Earlier in the day Hopson disclosed that the Associated system had borrowed $1,000,000, which it has spent in fighting the utility bill.

The charge that Auburn, N. Y., school children had been used to solicit telegrams opposing the utility bill was made by William A. Collins, House committee counsel. Hopson disclaimed any knowledge of the incident. Hopson denied that he maintained a lobby in every State in which his companies operated, but he said lawyers were hired to keep track of pending legislation.

The testimony concerning the Connecticut meter reader was brought out earlier in the day before the Senate committee.

Philip H. Gadsden, chairman of the committee of public utility executives, which has been opposing the utility bill, issued a statement characterizing as "wholly inaccurate" Hopson's previous testimony that the A. G. & E. had been asked to co-operate with his committee.

"The committee of public utility executives wholly condemns some of the practices which have been charged against certain representatives of the Associated Gas & Electric Co., and regrets Mr. Hopson's apparent effort to evade testifying before the investigating committee until compelled to do so."

In answer to questions he said, however, that some of Gadsden's recent statements had been "pretty good."

Caskie Named To I.C.C. Board By Roosevelt

Wide Traffic Experience Factor in Alabaman's Appointment.

By the Associated Press.

President Roosevelt yesterday nominated Marion M. Caskie, of Alabama, as a member of the Interstate Commerce Commission.

He was born in Virginia in 1890 and educated at Fort Union Military Academy.

From 1906 to 1910 Caskie was with the Southern Railway and until 1917 engaged in practice, specializing in interstate commerce work. He was general manager of the Montgomery, Ala., Chamber of Commerce transportation bureau and also traffic manager of the Alabama Farm Bureau Federation and other similar associations from 1917 to 1929.

Caskie served as executive secretary of the Southern Traffic League from 1920 to 1930 and also was president and chairman of the board of directors of the league.

Other connections included regional vice president of the National Industrial Traffic League, assistant to the vice president of the Reynolds Metal Co. and assistant to the vice president of the Stokely Co., in charge of transportation; general manager of the Terminal Railway, Alabama State Docks since 1931; served on United States Chamber of Commerce railroad and traffic committees, Mississippi Valley Association; Federal Food Administration for Alabama during the World War, Southern traffic assistant to the Federal Co-ordinator of Transportation in 1933 and resigned that position June 1, 1935.

Since that time Caskie has been with the Waterman Steamship Co., of New York.

George I. Wilson Shot At Home in Jersey

Vineland, N. J., Aug. 16 (AP).—George I. Wilson, 80, National Party presidential nominee in 1932, was shot in the chest as he lay in bed at his home today.

He was reported in a critical condition and unable to talk to police.

The authorities said no weapon was found near him. They said they doubt the wound could have been self-inflicted.

After the National Party, pledged to a plan of monetary reform, had nominated him as its standard bearer, Wilson declined to enter the campaign.

Naval Session Hopes Revived By British Step

Increases Likely.

It is entirely possible—likely, some think—that a limitation agreement is not possible unless some increase in existing armament levels is made. Not only do the Japanese want greater tonnage, as an alternative for the United States and Great Britain coming down to their present level—a most unlikely development—but the British have become increasingly adamant in their desire for 70 cruisers.

Recent developments also are regarded as indicating that naval limitations will have to be revised upward, if there is any agreement. By agreeing to a German navy equal to 35 per cent of its own sea power, the British brought into the world another sea power. Instead of complicating the situation this development eventually may be the key through which it is solved.

Germany's plans for naval strength equal to 35 per cent of the British has awakened Russia to a need of sea power, while the French no longer are satisfied with equality with Italy. The French are demanding, informally, greater tonnage, pointing out that they must be ready not alone to take care of their interests in the Mediterranean but also against Germany.

French, Italian Problem.

Italian spokesmen are not ready to concede the French should have a ton more than their navy. Increased French and Italian fleets, along with the new Germany strength, makes increased sea power essential for the British. Standing alone as viewed from Washington it looks like a vicious circle which can not be broken unless some nation is ready to make sacrifices.

But the increase in the German fleet may readily be taken care of from the French and British viewpoints, through permitting Russia sea power equal to that of the Reich. A Franco-Russian understanding already exists. Moreover, Franco-Italian relations have not been better since the end of the World War than they have been in the last six months. The Italo-Ethiopian controversy may disrupt this relationship.

Roosevelt's Formula.

At all events, these various factors create a situation in which President Roosevelt's formula of "equality of security"—instead of "equality of armament"—may play an important part. It brings into the picture factors other than tonnage. Consequently, the Franco-Russian entente may be counted as a factor equivalent to certain tonnage.

In the Pacific, "equality of security" might be achieved between Japan and the United States by making fortification of this country's insular possessions a major factor. Indeed, it is possible that this Government might agree to an increase in Japanese armaments in return for the right to fortify the Aleutian Islands, Guam and other Far Eastern possessions.

On the other hand, the Japanese may concede that such a price is too high to pay for any substantial increase in armament if they can get rid of the hated 5-5-3 ratio system. This Government is seriously considering fortification of Pacific insular possessions as soon as the Washington Treaty—which forbids it—ends. Indication of this was given earlier this week when the President forbade private aircraft flying over the Aleutian group.

Missouri Mob Beats 2 Agents Of Mortgagor

Farmers Stop Foreclosure at Maysville, Get Drunk, Seize Courthouse.

By the United Press.

Maysville, Mo., Aug. 16.—Two hundred farmers who took part in the assault upon a United States marshal at Plattsburg yesterday beat two mortgage company representatives today and blocked a scheduled mortgage foreclosure sale.

J. Lyman Andrews and Earl C. McKissick, representatives of Bartlett Brothers, a St. Joseph, Mo., mortgage company, were beaten and kicked when they came to Maysville.

The rioters were led by men who were in charge of yesterday's demonstration at the courthouse, including, it is alleged, Sam Divelbiss, whose farm was saved when the mob "ganged" Marshal Henry B. Dillingham and his three aids.

The demonstrators were members of the Farmers Protective Association, which had threatened to block today's sale and other similar actions at Maryville and Gallatin later in the month.

Leaders Threaten Judge.

Leaders were unconcerned over the submission of evidence gathered yesterday to a Federal grand jury which meets August 26. They made new threats against Federal Judge Merril E. Otis, a Republican, who ordered yesterday's sale.

Otis was warned not to attempt to fulfill a speaking engagement at an Old Settlers' reunion at his home town, Hopkins. He defied the mobsters.

The beating of Andrews and McKissick occurred after mob members turned their raid into a spree. The raiders arrived at Maysville shortly before 9 a. m. They warned Sheriff Robert Daniels that he was not to conduct the mortgage foreclosure sale of the C. Allen Schottel farm.

Daniels agreed to withdraw the sale offer. The mob then produced jugs of whisky and took over the Dekalb County courthouse for party purposes. To a man the raiders soon were intoxicated.

They roamed the streets, waved wooden canes, and shouted and sang. Passersby were insulted or struck with the canes. Merchants closed their shops. Newspapermen were driven from town and the local publisher, M. J. Pollard, and his staff were forbidden to leave their offices.

Daniels telephoned Andrews and McKissick in St. Joseph that the sale could not be conducted. They agreed to remain out of the town.

Agents Readily Submit.

Meanwhile, a delegation of farmers went to St. Joseph and served papers on the mortgage company which forbade the sale. Andrews and McKissick then drove to Maysville to inspect the original petition which led to the stop order.

They were recognized as soon as they appeared and were hustled and beaten back into their automobile and forced to flee. Neither was badly hurt.

The St. Joseph mortgage company said the National Life Insurance Co. of Montpelier, Vt., held the mortgage on the Schottel farm, a 79½-acre tract, 11 miles west of Maysville. The mortgage is for $5,000.

Another St. Joseph mortgage company of the same name handled the Divelbiss mortgage foreclosure sale through the Federal courts for a New Jersey insurance company. Marshall Dillingham had incorrectly reported the Divelbiss mortgage to be held by the Mutual Life Insurance Co., of New York. The mortgage represented a $16,000 loan.

Judge Otis called a conference today with E. E. Conroy, special agent in charge of Kansas City Federal agents, Dillingham and U. S. district attorneys. It was indicated that Federal agents would be sent into the riot zones.

Deputies George Colbern, Robert Pulliam and E. E. Fisher were handled roughly at Plattsburg. Colbern bore multiple bruises and cuts from fist and cane blows. Dillingham also was badly bruised.

Labor Attacks U. S. for Claim Of Income Rise

Executives' Salaries Listed in Report, Declares A. F. L. Council.

By the Associated Press.

Atlantic City, N. J., Aug. 16.—The American Federation of Labor's executive council charged the Commerce Department tonight with putting out "misleading" information when it stated this week that labor's portion of the national income was greater last year than in 1929.

The salaries of bank presidents, factory superintendents and all classes of executives were included in "labor's" income, the council said.

Excluding these executives' salaries, "and I scarcely call bank presidents laborers," smiled William Green, federation president, labor's income was scarcely more than one half of its 1929 size, the council added.

Mourn Rogers, Post.

Concluding its quarterly meeting here, the council also adopted a resolution expressing regret at news of the death of Will Rogers, cowboy humorist, and Wiley Post, aviator, in a plane crash in Alaska.

Inclusion of executive salaries in labor's income, the council said, raised the total unduly not only because of the size of these salaries but also because they had been trimmed far less than ordinary wages during the depression.

"Thus, from 1929 to 1932 wages in specified industries declined 59 per cent, while the salaries of management fell only 40 per cent," the council's statement said.

Claims Effect Obscured.

"The department also includes a very large number of salaried workers who have been particularly fortunate during depression—those working for the Federal Government, whose income as a group has increased since 1929; those working in industries which have suffered relatively little from depression, such as electric power plants, telephone and telegraph companies.

"The inclusion of these groups obscures the effects of depression on the income of the mass of our wage earners in mines, factories, railroads, building construction.

"When figures are shown separately for these wage earners, we realize that they have lost more heavily than any to her group."

Detroit Butchers Ask Courts End Picketing

Detroit, Aug. 16 (AP).—Detroit meat dealers appealed to Gov. Frank D. Fitzgerald and the courts today for aid as housewives renewed their picketing in several business districts for the fourth consecutive week-end.

The Retail Butchers Association asked the Governor to mediate between the packers and the housewives, and sought a Circuit Court injunction to restrain the women from picketing. The housewives demand a 20 per cent reduction in meat prices.

The strike leaders went forward with plans for an appeal of their own. Mrs. Mary Zuk, chairman of the boycott committee, said a delegation elected to interview Secretary Wallace in Washington would leave Saturday.

Lloyds' underwriters quoted the allegedly prohibitive rate of 99 per cent for insuring against an outbreak of hostilities before the end of the year. The C. E. Heath Co., one of the biggest Lloyds brokers, announced:

"We are not taking any further commitments."

British and foreign military officials here said war between Italy and Ethiopia is likely to break out between September 1 and 20.

Athens, Aug. 16 (AP).—Newspapers demanded today that the Greek government protest to Italy against the reported use of the Dodecanese Islands as a base for operations in East Africa.

The press charged the Italians are attempting to conscript natives, of Greek descent, and are commandeering Greek homes and ships.

Point Barrow Flying Hazards Found Serious

Chicagoan Concedes Fare of $750 for Trip Not Unreasonable.

By the Associated Press.

New York, Aug. 16.—The hazards of flying over Point Barrow, Alaska, where Will Rogers and Wiley Post were killed, are vividly portrayed in the Point Barrow settlement quarterly published by Dr. Henry W. Greist, of the Presbyterian Board of Missions.

The board maintains a tiny hospital in the Alaskan settlement and sponsors the missionary work of Dr. Greist, who is in charge of the bodies of Post and Rogers.

Last summer, Lewis T. Greist, of Chicago, Ill., the doctor's brother, made a trip by plane to his brother's mission. Writing of his flying experiences in the little publication, made available here tonight by the board, he related:

"From Fairbanks to Barrow (the route followed by Post and Rogers)—ah, there's the rub. Only about 650 miles in an airline, but over the precipitous Endicott Range.

"The sawtooth mountains of the range leave no place in which to 'sit down' in case of mishap, and no way in which to get out even if a forced landing could be made, and a region, too, particularly subject to storm and fog.

"I had questioned the seemingly exorbitant rate as established, $750 for the trip, and was told that the trip is of such hazardous and uncertain character by reason of the terrain and the weather that the airways cannot risk the plane and the life of the pilot for any ordinary commercial fare, and that any contract for passage is subject to reservation, 'God willing and the weather permitting.'

U. of Md. Head Praises Research Building Plan

H. C. Byrd, acting president of the University of Maryland, yesterday issued the following statement in regard to the recent PWA allocation of $350,000 to be used for the construction of a new Bureau of Mines Research Building at College Park:

"The new Bureau of Mines Research Building will be for the eastern United States, the focal point for all research dealing with non-metallic minerals. The building will furnish the University of Maryland and scientific bodies throughout the country one of the finest libraries on the subject in the world."

United dry forces of the District will hold a rally meeting in Franklin Park tomorrow at 7:30 p. m.

Constitution For Methodist Union Drawn

Basis of 3-Unit Merging Must Be Ratified by Churches.

By the Associated Press.

Chicago, Aug. 16.—To the general conferences of its three main divisions, a constitution for a united Methodist Church of 20,000,000 constituent members was tendered today.

Concluding a four-day session devoted to drafting of the plan, 50 official delegates representing the Methodist Episcopal, Methodist Episcopal South and Methodist Protestant churches voted without dissent for union under the designation of "the Methodist Church."

They then concluded their collaboration with a prayer for sealing the three groups into the strongest numerical Protestant church in the United States.

A statement issued as the delegates departed for their homes explained that the merger "will not become operative until ratified by the vote of the several churches in general and annual conferences."

The Northern and Protestant units hold their general conferences next year, and the Southerners in 1938. The statement said the process of effectuating actual union would require "at least six years."

Reunion Effected.

Action of the 50, officially titled the joint commission on unity, brought reunion of the Northern and Southern branches, split before the Civil War over slavery, for the second time in 11 years to the same stage of realization. In 1924, differences over retention of old jurisdictional boundaries caused the reunion plans to fall short of the vote required at the general conferences.

Under the proposed constitution, "the Methodist Church" would consist of five geographical conferences, taking in the entire United States, and a general Negro conference, equal in authority to them.

Elections Provided.

The geographical units would elect bishops and take over many other functions formerly exercised by the general conferences of the constituent churches and would meet quadrennially as would the general conference.

The delegates settled a troublesome issue by approving a judicial council as a "supreme court" to which appeals from bishops' rulings might be taken.

Bishops of the Northern and Southern churches now in office and those elected before union is consummated would become bishops of the unified church.

7-Year-Old Boy Drowns While Wading in River

Seven-year-old Joseph Moses, colored, 630 Delaware avenue southwest, was drowned in the Potomac River two miles below the Highway Bridge yesterday when he stepped into a deep hole while wading yesterday afternoon.

The dead boy's brother, Roosevelt, and cousin, Clarence Stewart, reported the accident to Harbor Policemen W. E. Davis and P. D. Pailey, who recovered the body at 5:15 p. m. Grace Moses, mother of the dead boy, made the identification at District Morgue last night.

Electric Rates Ruled For Lodging Houses

The Public Utilities Commission yesterday restricted application of domestic current rates to lodging houses not having five or more rooms for lodgers. The order of the commission was issued after William A. Roberts, people's counsel, had asked the commission to prescribe a definite rule. In the past the electric company has exercised its discretion in applying commercial or domestic rates to lodging houses. Mr. Roberts protested the discretion was inequitably employed and the higher or lower rate was not based on any fixed rule.

Rogers, Post Struggled to Fame From Farm Jobs in Oklahoma

Country Mourns for Rogers As Its Homespun Philosopher

Comedian of Stage, Screen and Radio Carried His Simplicity of Living and His Career to Hearers in Fetching Style.

Will Rogers, Oklahoma cowboy, star comedian of stage, screen and radio and America's nearest approach to a court jester, once said he never wanted to be taken seriously while alive and probably not when dead.

Rogers' remark, typical of his pungent brand of humor, was uttered when the gum-chewing, lasso-throwing comedian was rather generally mentioned in 1932 as a candidate for the presidential nomination. The former cowboy, who began his stage career under flickering banjo-torch lights on the back end of a medicine show wagon, laughed off the suggestion. Said Rogers:

"A comedian can last only 'til he takes himself serious or his audience takes him serious, and I don't want neither one of those things to happen to me until I'm dead, if then, so let's stop all this foolishness right now."

The homely, loose-jointed Westerner, who brought chuckles to people all over the world with his drolleries, usually pointed at the political situation, was born 56 years ago on November 4 at Oolagah, Indian Territory. His father, Clem Rogers, played a part in adopting the first constitution of the State of Oklahoma and a county was named for him. Of this Will said:

Pronunciation Problem, He Said.

Rogers considered Claremore, Okla., his home town, made frequent references to it in his writings and stage appearances, and remained a legal resident of Oklahoma in later years when he spent most of his time at his magnificent ranch near Santa Monica, Calif.

He met Betty Blake, the girl he married, at a candy pullin' in Oolagah when he was 28. Rogers began his courtship that very night, but in the months that followed he was too bashful to propose. Finally he left Oklahoma and worked his way to South America and Australia, where he learned new rope tricks and riding stunts. He had already performed with circuses and in vaudeville for two years. Upon his return to Oolagah he screwed up enough courage to pop the question to Miss Blake. They were married November 25, 1908.

Two sons, Will, jr., and Jimmy, and a daughter, Mary, were born to the Rogerses. All three had their father's love for horses, became expert riders, and for a time the Rogers family could put a pretty good polo team on the field.

Mary "Went Society on Us."

"Had to break it up," Will kidded a few years ago. "Mary went society on us."

Miss Rogers has since deserted society for the stage. She came to Washington last spring, accompanied by her mother, to appear in a play at the National Theater.

It was a singularly close-knit family, considering Rogers' stardom on Broadway and in the films. He once remarked while playing in the Ziegfeld Follies that he was "one of the few men who had come through several years in Hollywood with the same wife."

Once Rogers was all prepared to go to the Orient. A few minutes before the boat sailed he changed his mind, hopped into an eastbound plane and flew to the Atlantic Coast to see Mary, who was rehearsing with a stock company.

"Suddenly got homesick for the kid," was Rogers' explanation.

Although he earned $25,000 a week as an actor over a period of several years and had a fortune estimated at several million dollars, Rogers and his family lived simply. Will, jr., worked on small California newspapers for a time and, when he went to Stanford University occupied modest quarters.

Educated by Easy Stages.

Rogers' own education came, he said, by easy stages.

"I studied the fourth reader for ten years," he once told an interviewer but despite his home-spun grammar and his boasts of being "ignerant" he had gone through the Willow Hassell School at Neosho, Mo., and Kemper Military Academy at Booneville.

His mother, like many a mother before her, wanted her son to be a Methodist minister, but Will was more interested in riding the range and throwing a rope on his father's ranch. Then he began traveling with medicine shows and carnivals. When a rancher, Zach Mulhall, organized a Wild West show Will joined it and eventually go to New York. Tradition has it that he first attracted public notice on a large scale when he lassoed a wild steer that broke loose at Madison Square Garden and was about to dash through the crowd.

At any rate, soon after his first appearance at the Garden he was on the vaudeville stage. Charley Mack, of Moran and Mack, told of Will's first efforts along that line. They were pretty bad and Will knew it. He talked it over with Charley.

"Where are you going?" asked Mack.

"Back to Oklahoma."

"Been fired yet?"

"Well, the manager said I was punk."

"Yeh," said Mack, "you're all of that. But has he actually told you that you're fired?"

"Well, no."

"Don't quit till he tells you. Maybe you can stick it out to Saturday night. That will be three days' more pay."

Wisecrack Avoided Job Loss.

Before Saturday night rolled round, the gum-chewing cowboy happened to drawl a wisecrack about something he'd seen in a newspaper. The audience laughed. Rogers tried some more wisecracks, and was "made."

Within a few weeks Will and his lariat were performing on Hammerstein's Roof at $150 a week. From the roof it was a short step to Ziegfeld Follies. He was a Follies star for six years and while on the stage kidded other members of the cast as well as poking fun at events of the day. It was in the Ziegfeld show that he first began using his most famous expression: "All I know is what I read in the papers."

His verbal darts pierced everybody from the Ku Klux Klan to Presidents and princes. He said years ago the Klan would never get anywhere in New York "because no organization can thrive on a 1 per cent margin and besides there ain't enough clean sheets in New York."

Once when he was doing a radio broadcast the Prince of Wales happened to figure largely in the news of the moment. But the broadcast fell on Mother's Day and Rogers gave scant mention to the prince, explaining that "after all, he never was a mother."

Talkies Brought Him Fame.

Will ventured into pictures in the days of the "silents," but was something of a disappointment because the soundless screen could not record his homely and invariably amusing observations. But when talking pictures appeared Rogers became a box-office hit and from that time on the legitimate theater saw little of him. His most recent noteworthy stage appearance was in 1929 when he rushed across the continent to take the part of his long-time friend, Fred Stone, in a Stone production. An airplane accident had forced Stone to withdraw from the cast.

Rogers himself, although he never learned to pilot a plane, was a pioneer flier. He crossed the United States dozens of times as a passenger and constantly boosted aviation as a mode of travel. He was also widely known for his efforts in behalf of charity. In his quiet way he himself gave thousands of dollars and when the Midwest had a drought in 1930. Rogers raised a small fortune for the sufferers.

In 1933 and 1934 he donated $20,000 for continuing Red Cross public health nursing in places where it was to be cut off due to the depression. In May of 1933 he wired the Red Cross his intention of "litterin' up the mike with a little Oklahoma grammar to make contribution to a couple of good causes," unemployment relief work of the Red Cross and Salvation Army.

Red Cross Attests Its Regard.

The deep regard the Red Cross had for him was attended in a 1933 telegram, made public yesterday. It read:

"When I pass from the Red Cross and knock at St. Peter's gate he will ask, 'Who comes here?' I will answer, 'John Barton Payne, chairman of the American Red Cross.' He will ask, 'By what right do you expect to enter?' I will answer, 'I knew Will Rogers.' He will say, 'That is sufficient. Come right in.'"

Mr. Payne died last January.

It was after several years as a stage star that Rogers made a political speech in 1923 for Ogden Mills, a blue stocking candidate for Congress, in which he said Mills was "the only candidate who owned his own silk hat." That was the beginning of Rogers' career as an after-dinner speaker. From that time on his droll remarks were reported in the newspapers and finally he decided to try to put his ideas on paper. Several years ago a series of his articles appeared in The Washington Post.

Rogers never wanted to be considered a writer, actor or philosopher. He was content to be known as an Oklahoma cowboy. There was Cherokee Indian blood in his veins and he was proud of it. One of his witticisms was based on this fact. He said his ancestors didn't come over on the Mayflower; they were there to meet the boat.

Must Find Role Like Him, He Said.

"I'm not smart enough to act," he once said. "If they can find a role that's like me, I'm all right. Otherwise, I'm punk."

He used to drive the motion picture bosses frantic by saying whatever popped into his head instead of following the script when he appeared in front of the sound recording mechanism.

His studio prepared a luxurious place for him to occupy while on the lot. A sanded garden decorated with cactus plants surrounded an adobe hut dressed up with an electric kitchen and a living-room filled with Western and Indian trophies. Rogers looked in, said it was "swell" and never went back until former President Coolidge and Mrs. Coolidge came to call. He ushered them into the adobe house muttering, "they have to set somewhere, don't they?"

Claremore, Okla, built a fine six-story hotel and named it after its famous adopted son. Rogers boasted the buildings had more bathrooms than Buckingham Palace.

"I used to envy Gen. Grant and Jesse James because they had cigars named after them but, shucks, now I've kinda got it on 'em," drawled Will.

Rogers' use of bad grammar was largely a pose. Once an interviewer suggested he took too many liberties with the laws of syntax.

"What's that?" asked Will. "Sounds like bad news."

Admirer of Mark Twain.

He was a great admirer of Mark Twain and on a visit to Virginia City, Nev., where the great humorist once lived he tried to find a bed Twain had occupied. He learned that when Twain lived there he was too poor to own a bed.

Most of Rogers' reading consisted in perusing newspapers. He was remarkably well-informed, reading virtually every word in every available paper wherever he happened to be each morning. He often remarked that he spent more on newspapers than on clothes. When asked if he ever read any fiction, he replied, "Sure, the newspapers." He always tried out his own writing on his wife. If she liked them they were sent to the publisher. If she didn't, Will rewrote them.

He found his recreation in traveling and in playing polo. In a group of horsemen, nattily attired in riding breeches and shining boots, Rogers usually was garbed in overalls over cowboy boots. But he could ride with the best of them. He always said he could take more chances than other motion picture actors because: "I couldn't make my mug look much worse no matter how I hurt it."

Not long ago Rogers, returned from a trip, was chatting with polo players and fans after a match, says the Associated Press. He was asked what he did on his visit to several cities.

"Just blathered," he grinned.

"What's blathering?" he was asked.

Not An Ounce of Arrogance.

There was not an ounce of arrogance in the whole 180 pounds of the man. In fact he was overly-modest. One evening while driving with Mrs. Rogers they decided to attend a movie. The star had not seen his latest picture so they drove to a theater where it was showing, parked the automobile, and entered the lobby. Then Rogers found he had no money with him.

"Let's go home," he said. It never occured to him that he could enter any theater in the United States with no more credentials than his well-known face.

The latchstring at the Rogers ranch was always out. The cowboy-philosopher's friends knew where he kept the key to the ranch gate, in a notched hole on one side of the gatepost. He was a warm friend of the Lindberghs and in their hours of suffering after the kidnaping of their first-born son, they were guests at the ranch, secluded from all visitors.

Several years ago someone suggested to Rogers the possibility of dangers in air flights.

Will smiled, chewed gum, paused a moment, and then said he bore a charmed life and expected to live to be at least 100 years old.

On 1930 he made a speech in Boston concerning the epitaph to be placed on his grave.

"When I die my epitaph, or whatever you call those signs on gravestones, is going to read, 'I joked about every prominent man of my time but I never met a man I didn't like.'

"I am proud of that," Rogers added. "I can hardly wait to die so it can be carved. And when you come around to look at my grave you'll probably find me sitting there, proudly reading it."

Rogers' Death Fulfills Wish in Radio Speech

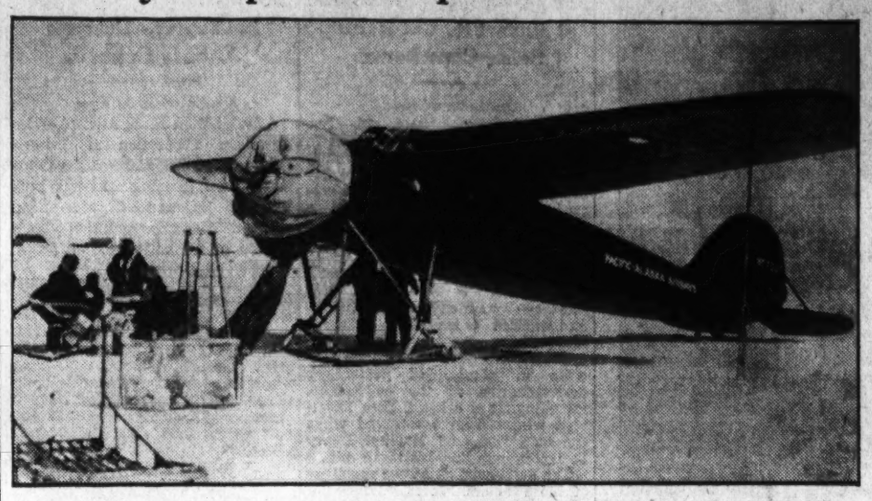
Baltimore, Aug. 16 (AP).—Will Rogers died the way he said he wanted to die—"in an airplane."

The Evening Star quotes Baltimoreans as recalling today that the humorist in the midst of his radio broadcast early this year turned from fun to gravity to eulogize his friends in the Army flying service. One of them had just lost his life.

Rogers spoke of the fascination of flying and the high quality of courage it requires.

"Flying is dangerous," listeners quoted him, "but man will overcome its dangers. * * * When my time comes to die I want it to be in an airplane."

'Mercy' Ship and Hospital Where Bodies Lie



A plane of the Pacific-Alaska Airways, which will carry the bodies of Will Rogers and Wiley Post from Alaska to the United States, is shown here. This plane was used to check the epidemic of influenza at Point Barrow in May of this year.

probably when his arm dropped into the water after death.

"The native runner," Dr. Greist went on, "in his excitement on first arriving here, mumbled in his dialect of a red plane 'blowing up' close to his little camp.

"Sergt. Morgan immediately set out in a whale boat for the scene, but darkness and ice made progress slow.

"By the time he and a companion had arrived, natives had taken the body of Rogers out of the wreckage and salvaged the personal effects they could find.

"Under Morgan's direction, ropes then had to be secured to the wreckage to pull it apart to free the body of Post, which was jammed under the wreckage.

"Both wings had been broken loose from the fuselage and the motor driven back into the cabin by the crash.

"The bodies of the two men and their effects were placed in a skin boat and towed back here."

Restricted License.

At the same time it became known in Los Angeles that the millionaire humorist and the famous globe-trotter were using a plane made up of second-hand parts and operating under a restricted Government license.

At the Burbank, Calif., plant where the ship was assembled under Post's direction it was said that although the craft had a new 550-horsepower motor, it was not to be considered a new type of ship.

Aviation men said the fuselage was taken from a plane that had ground-looped and damaged its wings. The wings of the Post plane, they said, were taken from a speed ship.

The real aims of the flight and Rogers' actual part in it still were not definitely known here tonight.

Mystery About Trip.

He said Rogers financed the aerial vacation, adding that he talked with Post just before he flew north.

From the first, the venture was highly charged with secrecy. At Los Angeles the belief prevailed that Post was en route to Siberia and Moscow to blaze a new air trail to the Soviet capital for United States aviation interests. Post denied this. He said he was going to "hunt tigers" in Siberia and described the jaunt as a mere pleasure trip.

Rogers was believed at Los Angeles to be planning to accompany Post only to Alaska, returning by boat. At Seattle, however, W. W. Conner, Pacific Coast vice president of the National Aeronautic Association, said today the humorist intended all along to go at least as far as Siberia.

Wife Escapes Death.

Fifty miles out of Fairbanks the treacherous Northern fog bore down on them and Post "sat down" on Harding Lake for a few hours.

But for a surprising, last-minute decision, Post's attractive wife might also have been in the death plane. She had planned to fly with Post and Rogers.

The day the flight started from Renton Airport, south of Seattle, August 7, Mrs. Post told reporters she had changed her mind. She said the trip might be "too strenuous," adding:

"I wanted Wiley to be more comfortable. Besides, there are other reasons."

Rumors spread that the famous flier and his wife were quarreling. Mrs. Post stamped her foot in anger. "Baloney!" she said.

Today, at Ponca City, Okla., with relatives, she was prostrated with grief. She had flown there quietly two days ago for an operation.

The stop at Harding Lake enabled them to await the lifting of fog there. Then they encountered it again as they streaked farther on toward the pole.

They sighted the Eskimo camp southwest of here, an area described by Andrew Bahr, famous reindeer driver, as one of the most desolate places in the world.

Planes to Carry Bodies.

Obtaining directions, they set out on the little hop to Barrow. Here Rogers wanted to visit Charles Brower, known as "the king of the Arctic." Brower has lived in the Arctic 51 years. He is a trader and operates a whaling station nearby.

The tragedy occurred during the height of the short Arctic summer—Barrow is more than 300 miles inside the Arctic Circle, at the end of Alaska's northermost point. Even yet, Barrow's "Harbor" in the Arctic Ocean roadstead is open only at intervals to shipping and the Coast Guard cutter Northland is held in the icepack off Wainwright, 75 miles southwest of here, after her annual visit here.

"Only feasible method of quick removal of bodies is by airplane," the Northland advised.

Comedy for Natives.

Behind the flyers when their dash to the top of Alaska ended in the shallow Arctic stream, lay miles upon miles of barren, treeless tundra traversed by the Colville River and its few and winding tributaries.

Barrow itself is a tiny spot on the end of Point Barrow. It is inhabited by about a dozen white persons and several hundred natives.

The visit to Alaska was the jovial philosopher-comedian's first. Post was well known here. Everywhere crowds flocked to cheer them and to shake their hands.

Rogers would flash the grin known 'round the world.

"Me and Wiley," he said once, "are just a couple of Oklahoma boys trying to get along."

In a transport plane, they flew over the Government's Matanuska Valley colonization project yesterday. Rogers had said he wanted to organize a polo team there.

Both were proud of Oklahoma and visited there often—Rogers his beloved Claremore and Post, Maysville, near where his parents live.

Post's Strato Efforts.

It was the first extended flight for Post's new red, low-winged monoplane aside from a Southwestern hunting trip on which Rogers accompanied him. Mrs. Post went along, too.

Post shelved his famed world-girdling Winnie Mae, in which he twice circled the globe, after failing in four attempts to span the continent in the substratosphere.

He confessed he used the Winnie Mae on the substratosphere flights "for pure sentiment."

Despite his failures, Post went to his death convinced that aviation's future lies in the substratosphere—at altitudes ranging about 32,500 feet.

Alaska first saw Post in the summer of 1931 when he and Harold Gatty made their record-breaking (at that time) flight around the world, and crossed Alaska. They made the flight from New York to New York in 8 days 15 hours and 51 minutes.

Two years later, however, Post, flying solo, bettered the time by nearly a day, and Alaska again saw him as he streaked across the Territory, although he had a minor crash at Flat. His time around the world was 7 days 18 hours 49½ minutes.

Post, the fatalist, walked away from several minor accidents in his years as a flier. Rogers had suffered only one superficial injury in a plane. That was in 1928 when landing gear buckled at Las Vegas, Nev. Rogers was scratched. Aviation authorities estimated he had flown 1,000,000 miles as a passenger.

Pilot Crosson, who had advised Post and Rogers against making the Point Barrow flight because of bad weather, faced reports of "not too good" weather for his own flight today. He was accompanied by Robert Gleason, chief Pan-American Airways radio man here.

Were Undaunted by Fog.

Post and Rogers took off in the face of a report that there was a dense fog along the route and the thermometer registered 45 degrees.

Friends quoted Post as saying "I think we might as well go anyway." Rogers, they said, agreed, declaring "there's lots of lakes we can land on."

Rogers' humorous "wisecracks" about Alaska and Alaskans struck at every point. They were picked up and told over and over by the natives.

At Juneau he said:

"I've got to congratulate you Alaskans. In Alaska, you've got 30,000 whites and 65 airplanes."

He was told the territorial Senate was composed of eight Democrats and the House 16 Democrats and one Republican.

"I'll get Farley to work on that other guy," he said.

Mrs. Rogers Leaves

By the Associated Press.

Skowhegan, Me., Aug. 16.—Mrs. Will Rogers left Lakewood late today for her California home.

She was accompanied by her daughter, Mary, 19, a member of the Lakewood Summer Theater Company, whom she came here to visit last Tuesday. Also with her was her sister, Miss Theda Blake.

The first leg of the journey from Lakewood to Waterville, where they were to take a train for New York, was by automobile. It was believed Mrs. Rogers' plans provided for a stop of a few days in New York before beginning the transcontinental journey to her Santa Monica home.

Every effort was made to permit their movement without public attention.

Post Funeral Plans

By the United Press.

Maysville, Okla., Aug. 16.—Wiley Post's funeral will be a simple, old-fashioned one under the trees in the front yard of his father's farm home, his widow and parents decided tonight.

Mrs. Mae Post, the widow, will leave tomorrow morning for Seattle by plane. The day of the funeral was not set, pending determination of how long it would take to get the body back from Point Barrow to Maysville.

Post probably will be buried in the country cemetery near this central Oklahoma farm town.

"We're going to give him a simple funeral, in the yard of the home, under the trees, in an old-fashioned way," his father, the aging W. F. Post, told friends.

"We don't want it to be demonstrative or to have a lot of publicity. We want it so the neighbors and all his and our friends can come."

Mrs. Post, the slim Texas girl Post married in an airplane elopement back in 1927, agreed. So did the flier's mother.

"I wish to God I had been with him when he crashed," Mrs. Wiley Post cried out this morning when informed of the tragedy. She was at Ponca City then, resting at the home of relatives, for an operation.

She abandoned the Post-Rogers Alaskan trip last week at Seattle, friends said, because Post had a premonition something might happen.

While the family considered funeral arrangements, telegrams were delivered to the farm. One of these was understood to be from Mrs. Will Rogers, widow of the other crash victim, advising the Posts Rogers' body would be brought from Alaska by plane and asking whether Mrs. Post wanted Wiley's brought, too.

Friends said the funeral probably would not be held before next Thursday. Burial probably will be in the Maysville Cemetery.

Russians Mourn.

By the Associated Press.

Moscow, Aug. 16.—Official Russian quarters tonight expressed deep regret at the death of Wiley Post and Will Rogers.

"Both victims were very popular in the Soviet Union," stated an official spokesman. "We were looking forward to their arrival in Russia with the greatest interest.

"The news of the disaster naturally comes as a profound shock to us."

The news of the accident arrived early in the evening and was communicated immediately to Ambassador William C. Bullitt, of the United States, who likewise expressed his profound regret.

Hospital Morgue

By the Associated Press.

New York, Aug. 16.—The little frame hospital at Point Barrow, Alaska, where the bodies of Will Rogers and Wiley Post have been taken, is the only hospital in a radius of 1,000 miles.

Dr. Henry W. Greist, head of the hospital, is an elderly Presbyterian missionary physician, formerly of Indiana. He left his Middle-West medical practice in 1920 and went to Alaska with his wife.

The hospital, painted white, stands on a treeless, flat strip of land. It is said to be the northernmost hospital in the world.

Paper Proposes Rogers Memorial

Publications and Theaters Urged to Assist.

By the Associated Press.

Wilmington, N. C., Aug. 16.—The Wilmington Star-News today called upon newspapers and theaters throughout the country to join with it in raising a fund to erect a memorial to Will Rogers, killed today with Wiley Post in an airplane crash in Alaska.

The memorial, of a nature to be determined, would be erected in the cowboy-humorist's home town, Claremore, Okla.

In a front page editorial in its afternoon edition today the News asked "the co-operation of all newspapers and theaters throughout the United States in receiving contributions of one cent each from the thousands who have laughed with Rogers, been cheered by his wit and observed the tremendous effect of his abilities."

Crash Victims Were Unafraid Of Death Perils

Post Died as He Wished to; Hunches Made Him Defiant of Fate.

By the Associated Press.

Oklahoma City, Aug. 16.—Wiley Post died just as he wished to die.

Aviator friends of the famed flier recalled here today that Post seldom talked of death, but accepted its possibility philosophically.

A few months ago he signed a release at Bartlesville, absolving Frank Phillips, sponsor of his stratosphere flights, of any blame in event of a crash, Bennie Turner, newspaper aviation writer, recalled.

"Sure, that's all right," he commented, as he and Mrs. Post signed the release. "I know it's dangerous, but if I get popped off that's the way I want to go, doing the things I want to do."

Rogers, too, was unafraid of an air crash. On a night flight from Dallas to Chicago a mail plane had arranged to carry him, but Rogers declined to ride with the mail under a waiver when he learned the plane was not authorized to carry passengers. Instead, he chartered a ship to follow the mail plane.

At the municipal airport here Rogers remarked: "We should not break rules. And I would have had to have ridden on a parachute if I had flown in the mail plane. Picture this farm boy dangling from a parachute. I'll always come in with the plane."

Post was unafraid because he played hunches. Friends said if he had felt there was any danger in flying to Alaska he would not have gone.

When Post took the Winnie Mae on its last trip from Oklahoma City to California he stopped and looked the plane over.

"You're getting tired," he commented. Then he put on a parachute and forced his mechanic to do likewise.

Terse Army Radio Discloses Tragedy

A terse, graphic message came by radio yesterday morning to the United States Signal Corps in Washington.

The message was sent by Sergt. Morgan, Signal Corps, U. S. A., from Point Barrow, Alaska. Official notice of the death of Wiley Post and Will Rogers, it said:

"10:00 p. m. native runner reported plane crashed 15 miles south of Barrow. Immediately hired fast launch, proceeded to scene, found plane complete wreck, partly submerged two feet of water. Recovered body of Rogers and then necessary tear plane apart extract body of Post from water. Brought bodies to Barrow, turned over to Dr. Greist, also salvaged personal effects which I am holding. Advise relatives and instruct this station fully as to procedure. Natives camping small river 15 miles south of here, claim Post and Rogers landed, asked way to Barrow, taking off engine misfired on right bank while only 50 feet over water. Plane out of control, crashed, tearing right wing off and toppling over, forcing engine back through body of plane. Both apparently killed instantly. Both bodies bruised. Post's wrist watch broken, stopped 8:18 p. m."

Bad Luck Put Airways Star On Way to Goal

Money He Got for Loss of Eye in Accident Went to Buy Plane.

From the modest farm home of his boyhood, near the little town of Maysville, Okla., Wiley Post rose to become one of the world's greatest fliers.

Not only was the one-eyed birdman conqueror of the spaces and distances—he was conqueror of the imagination as well. To the countless millions in many lands who watched his breath-taking exploits in the air through newspaper headlines, he was the personification of daring—a stocky, cyclopean knight on a mechanical griffin of the machine age.

Post's story was the story of triumph—first over financial difficulties, then over physical handicap. It was the story of courage, steel nerve, madcap adventure above the clouds!

His Career Methodical.

But there was painstaking method and design in the life of Wiley Post—the roaring, soaring, giddy life in the sky.

He took chances, but he had reason to—and before each flight he calculated carefully, as carefully as science and skill made calculation possible.

Each flight was a game of golf, each individual hop a hole, in which he must beat par.

Fame and fortune changed him little personally. He was the same hearty, bluff Wiley Post who worked in the oil fields and yearned for glory; who barnstormed as an unknown, feeling always his destiny was in the skies.

The aerial exploits of Wiley Post were varied and many. His first taste of fame came in September, 1930, when he flashed across the country in a white airplane to win a cross-country dash against a famous field from the West Coast to Chicago. That netted him $15,000 and the gift of the plane in which he became the world's foremost girdler—the Winnie Mae.

Girdled Globe in Eight Days.

In a sensational dash around the earth, through the charted and uncharted skyways, he and Harold Gatty set a record in 1931—a record of 8 days 15 hours and 51 minutes.

Day in and day out, from New York to Berlin, from Berlin to Moscow, and then across Siberia, the pair flew—until they stepped from the Winnie Mae in New York, their starting point, with the thunder of the world's applause ringing in their partially deafened ears.

Not content to rest on his laurels Post broke the record he and Gatty made in 1933, when, in a solo hop, he circled the world in 7 days 18 hours and 49½ minutes. The acclaim he had won two years was little in comparison to the ovation he received at the completion of this feat.

The following year the flier announced he would concentrate on the practical side of aviation. He made two sensational trips into the high altitude over his home town of Bartlesville, Okla. In these hops he wore a supercharged suit of his own design.

Post made four unsuccessful attempts to make a transcontinental flight through the stratosphere, but each time he was forced down on the way from Burbank, Calif., to New York. His last failure was June 1 of this year.

All but the last of Post's exploits were made in the Winnie Mae. It was the Winnie Mae in which he roared to fame and glory.

From the first, when, as an unknown he had his dream, Post had ambitions to become an airplane pilot.

Although he was under age, he enlisted in the Signal Corps for Aviation during the World War, but he was discharged when authorities learned he had tacked several years onto his actual age.

When the armistice was signed he was working as a helper on an oil-drilling rig. But aviation had captured his imagination after his first ride.

By a quirk of fate, Post got his first money to purchase a plane from the Canadian Government through an accident in the oil fields. One eye was so badly injured physicians removed it, but with the compensation he received he got the plane.

Barnstormed for Years.

There followed years of barnstorming through the Southwest.

Post took to parachute jumping with success. Here and there on his helter-skelter tours he thrilled the crowds with his flying stunts.

While touring Texas in 1927 he met Mae Laine. He took her for a flight and in the little town of Graham was forced down. On the spur of the moment the couple decided to get married and a justice of the peace performed the ceremony.

Post, Rogers Swell Toll Of Prominent Air Dead

New York, Aug. 16 (AP).—America's airplane crash toll, augmented today by Will Rogers and Wiley Post, has included several prominent persons in recent years.

Knute Rockne, Notre Dame football coach, died in the crash of a transport plane near Cottonwood Falls, Kans., March 31, 1931. Seven others also died.

Last May 6 U. S. Senator Bronson Cutting, of New Mexico; a young woman and two pilots died when a luxurious air liner fell near Macon, Mo.

Legacy of Wit Left by Rogers Inexhaustible

Humorist's 'Own' Epitaph Told of Universal Friendship.

By the Associated Press.

New York, Aug. 16.—Will Rogers left the world a rich legacy of spontaneous humor.

He expressed the hope a few years ago that his gravestone would bear this epitaph: "I joke about every prominent man of my time, but I never met a man I didn't like."

"And when you come around to my grave," he added, "you'll probably find me sitting there proudly reading it."

Some of his recorded "wisecracks" follow:

"We landed at Cairo, but I didn't got out see that thing—what do they call it?—the Sphinx. I figured anyhow I had just seen Cal Coolidge not long ago."

"The Republicans have a habit of having three bad years and one good one, and the good one always happens election year."

"Argentina exports wheat, meat and gigolos, and the United States puts a tariff on the wrong two."

Describing the London naval conference of 1930:

"We stood through one speech, sat through eight, slept through 12, and in three solid hours of compliments not a rowboat was sunk."

"England has more money invested in dress suits and dinner jackets than America has in plows and farming utensils."

He was strongly opposed to formal attire and at a dinner in Port of Spain, Trinidad, he expressed his opinion of "boiled shirts." Shortly afterward the Chinese Minister to Cuba, who had disappeared during the discourse, returned wearing a silk suit.

Commenting on Andrew Mellon's appointment as Ambassador to the Court of St. James:

Discussing world opinion:

"If the weather isn't right, we did it. If there are too many debts, it is out fault. If the Prince of Wales doesn't marry, we are to blame."

Senator Pat Harrison, of Mississippi, relates that he warned Rogers of the dangers of flying.

"He merely told me," the Senator said, "that I would be killed sometime trying to hit a golf ball."

To Mrs. Coolidge:

"Well, Grace, you can imitate Cal's voice better'n me, but look what you had to go through to learn it."

Concerning Lady Astor:

"Every time she comes to the show I try to get her to stand up and take a bow, but she won't. And over in the House of Commons they can't get her to sit down."

Point Barrow Farthest North

Bleak Place on Extreme Tip of Alaska Has Few White Residents.

Point Barrow, Alaska, which yesterday received the bodies of Will Rogers and Wiley Post, is in the bleak, desolate country of one of the most remote sections of the world.

The Presbyterian Hospital, into which the bodies of the intrepid airmen were taken, is a small, nine-bed institution, the only medical center within a radius of 1,000 miles.

There are only a handful of white residents. The few score of native Eskimos at Point Barrow gain a livelihood from trading and trapping over ground that is frozen most of the year. It is treeless, barren and inhospitable, according to a bulletin issued by the National Geographic Society yesterday.

The Point faces the Arctic Ocean, and lies on a coast that is overcast and cold. Col. and Mrs. Lindbergh, landing there August 9, 1931, were caught in a fog, but finally succeeded in bringing their plane down with the help of a radio operator.

In 1926 Point Barrow was the first land sighted from the dirigible, Norge, after its flight across the North Pole from Spitsbergen under the direction of Amundsen, Ellsworth and Nobile. Two years later it was the take-off point for a flight by Sir Hubert Wilkins across the Arctic to Spitsbergen.

The white mission hospital in Point Barrow stands on a treeless flat strip of land. It is said to be the northernmost hospital in the world. Ice melted in an iron drum near a little stove provides its only water supply in winter.

Last winter Dr. Henry W. Greist, head of the hospital, battled an influenza epidemic in the settlement. Serums and fuel were carried by airplane to the post from far away points.

Seven years ago the United States Army established a radio station at Point Barrow, giving it communication with the outside world.

Gems Found, 2 Arrested In Mdivani Crash Case

Copenhagen, Aug. 16 (U.P.).—Jewels, believed part of the $185,000 in gems lost by Baroness Maud von Thyssen when she was injured at Gerona, Spain, in the automobile crash which killed Prince Alexis Mdivani, were seized today.

Police arrested a man and woman, their names withheld, on suspicion of knowledge of the Thyssen loss. They carried gems worth $15,000.

All America Mourns Tragic Deaths of Rogers and Post

President Leads Tribute to Philosophical Comedian.

All America, from President Roosevelt, on a brief visit to his family estate in Hyde Park, to the man in the street and the housewife in her kitchen, mourned the deaths of Will Rogers, the Nation's foremost humorist, and Wiley Post, one of the world's most famous flyers, yesterday.

Calling Rogers and Post, killed when their plane fell 50 feet into 2 feet of water near Point Barrow, in northernmost Alaska Thursday night, "outstanding Americans," who "will be greatly missed," the President bowed his head in sorrow.

He was informed of the tragedy, which claimed the lives of his two distinguished friends, after his arrival in Hyde Park.

President's Tribute.

"I was shocked to hear of the tragedy which has taken Will Rogers and Wiley Post from us," said Mr. Roosevelt.

"Will was an old friend of mine, a humorist and a philosopher, beloved by all. I had the pleasure of greeting Mr. Post on his return from his round-the-world flight. He leaves behind a splendid contribution to the science of aviation.

"Both were outstanding Americans and will be greatly missed."

Perhaps the grief of the average American was best expressed by Vice President Garner, who knew Rogers as a cronie and was well acquainted with Post.

"Oh, that is awful bad!" the Vice President exclaimed. He raised his hands in dismay on learning that his humorist friend and Wiley Post had crashed to their death.

Intimates of both knew how much this companionship of the Vice President and the humorist meant for each. Official Washington realized that the annual Garner dinner to President Roosevelt never can be the same with droll, wise-cracking Will Rogers missing—Will Rogers, in his old blue serge suit, hobnobbing with his fellow-hater of dress suits, "Cactus Jack" Garner.

Incredulous at first, Speaker Byrns said later that he could not find immediate words to express his sorrow. The Speaker said last night he had a premonition that trouble would come to Rogers on his Alaskan flight.

"When I read he was going on that long trip," he said, after he had recovered from the shock the news brought him, 'I told my wife 'I wish Rogers wouldn't do that.'

"I said he was liable to get killed.

"Will Rogers had the ear of the public as few in this country did. Everybody read what he had to say in his quaint way. His death is a real loss—and Post's is too."

News Broken to Senate.

The Senate turned aside from legislative business when it convened for an eloquent tribute to the fallen two. The leaders of both parties—Robinson, of Arkansas, and McNary, of Oregon—joined.

No sooner had a quorum assembled in the stately chamber than Senator Robinson arose from his chair, directly in front of Vice President Garner.

"Probably the most widely known citizen of the United States and certainly the best beloved met his death some hours ago in a lonely and far away place," he said, as the others Senators listened in silence.

Will Rogers Regaled Garner on Visit Here

"We pause a moment in the midst of our duties to pay brief tribute to his memory and that of his gallant companion. I do not think of Will Rogers as dead.

"I shall remember him always as a sensible, courageous and loyal friend, possessed of unusual and notable talent. He made fun of all mankind. In nothing he ever said was there an intentional sting.

"He was kind, generous and patriotic. His companion was a courageous representative of a gallant group, who, on the wings of adventure, sought remote places and conquered long distances.

"All the Nation mourns these great citizens. They were both representatives of the highest type of manhood.

"No. 1 Air Passenger."

Immediately after Robinson had concluded his tribute, McNary rose from his seat on the Republican side to say that every Republican Senator "shares the same feeling."

Representative Johnson, of Oklahoma, an old friend of both Rogers and Post, was selected by Speaker Byrns to announce their deaths in the House.

"Not only were members of Congress shocked and stunned," he said, "but the entire world will mourn the loss of these two beloved and outstanding citizens, both of whom are native sons of the great Commonwealth of Oklahoma."

"Will Rogers has been regarded for years as the country's No. 1 air passenger.

"Wiley Post's exploits in round-the-world flying and in the stratosphere are known wherever people know about airplanes.

"The news of their accident shocked and stunned all of us in the Bureau of Air Commerce. The loss of these able men can not be measured."

"We have already set in motion machinery for investigation of the accident to determine the cause if possible. The Bureau of Air Commerce inspector in Alaska will proceed to the scene immediately and report to us when he has learned the facts."

"He was one of the cleanest, finest characters I have ever known," said Patrick Hurley, former Secretary of War, when he was told of Rogers' death.

"He was one of nature's noblemen.

"I knew Wiley Post well also. He was a brilliant and intrepid flier."

"Oklahoma has lost its two greatest sons," said Representative Will Rogers, of that State, as he recalled that the humorist's indorsement had helped put him in Congress.

"His loss will be felt by millions," commented Senator McAdoo, of California.

Rogers' death removes from the American scene "an observer whose characteristic comments provided instruction as well as amusement to those in public life," asserted Attorney General Cummings.

"His philosophic conception of men and institutions found expression in the truly American spirit," he concluded.

"Two Unique Citizens."

"All loved him," commented Representative Taylor, the Democratic leader.

"There are no two others like them," said Representative Patman, of Texas. "The Nation lost one of its unique citizens, the world one of its first aviators."

The two former Virginia Governors in Washington—Senator Harry F. Byrd and John Garland Pollard—were deeply distressed over the death of Rogers and Post.

"I knew both of them, and I am shocked by the fatal accident," said Senator Byrd.

Former President Herbert Hoover was in Chicago when informed of the tragedy.

"The news of the death in an airplane crash of Will Rogers and Wiley Post has come as a terrible shock to me," said the former Chief Executive, in a statement to the press.

"I have long known both of these fine Americans and have long been appreciative of their accomplishments. In origin and accomplishment, they were typically American, with their careers appealing to everyone appreciative of the pioneer spirit.

"They were great souls, and I feel a sense of deep personal loss in their passing."

Hollywood Mourns.

In Washington on business, Mayor Frank S. Shaw of Los Angeles said:

"I was with Will only two weeks ago. No words I could say now would completely express my sorrow."

In Long Beach, N. Y., Frank Phillips, president of the Phillips' Petroleum Co., and sponsor of Wiley Post's straosphere attempts, said he was "shocked and grieved at reports of the deaths of his two good friends."

"This is a terrible loss to their multitude of friends, to this Nation and the entire world," said Phillips.

In Hollywood, gay capital of the movie world, where Will Rogers was known and loved as no other actor of the silver screen, heads were bowed in sorrow.

Darryl F. Zamuck, vice president in charge of production of Twentieth Century Fox Films, was so choked with emotion he could not comment.

"The news come as a distinct shock," asserted Alfred E. Smith. "They were two great Americans, who will be missed by everybody."

Tributes From Aviators.

Big Gene Buck, president of the American Society of Authors and Composers, said:

"I can hardly believe that Will Rogers' voice is stilled forever. I do not believe I will see his like again."

Dorothy Stone, the actress, described word of the tragedy as "the worst shock I ever had."

"Every American will feel a personal loss in the sudden passing of these two beloved characters," said Mayor LaGuardia, of New York.

Prominent aviators, who knew well the world of wings and steel and sky and chance in which Rogers and Post met death, were grieved by their passing.

"America has lost a great person in Will Rogers and a great flier in Wiley Post," said Frank Hawks.

Capt. Eddie Rickenbacker, World War ace, commented:

"Both Rogers and Post have been pioneers with new equipment over uncharted skyways. Will Rogers was not a passenger, but an adventurer, with Wiley."

Sorrow From Abroad.

From across the sea, where both were known and admired, sorrowing friends raised their voices in eulogy.

"Wiley Post was regarded by us as a marvelous flier and a magnificent fellow," said Harold Perrin, of England's Royal Aero Club.

Ernest Udet, German war ace, said he "considered Post the greatest flier of all time and Rogers a prince of a fellow."

"Post certainly was the pioneer of stratosphere flying," asserted Viscount Jacques de Sibour, French air enthusiast.

From London, Jimmy Walker, former Mayor of New York, expressed his grief. "Two men who have made valuable contributions both to science and the joy of millions," sighed Walker.

Actors and actresses, show folk who knew and loved Will Rogers, were shaken by news of his death.

"It is a national calamity," said Fred Stone, the actor.

"Rogers was so human everyone who worked with him loved him," said George Marshall, the cinema director.

"Humanity has lost its best and most sincere friend in Rogers and one of its greatest aviators in Post," said Ronald Coleman.

"Will Rogers' death marks the passing of one of the greatest men of our time," commented Warner Baxter, of the films.

Grandmother's Grief.

"I'm sorry his wife, May, didn't get to fall with him instead of Mr. Rogers," said Mrs. Post.

"She's always told us she wanted to die with him when he crashed, and I know she hates to be left like this."

"I was anxious to go on this trip with him," said S. H. Post, the flier's uncle.

Tribute to Rogers' spirit came from the lips of Charles N. James, who flew him on the first Western air express mail trip between Los Angeles and Salt Lake City.

"He saw the future of transport flying in this country and often told us he intended to help it as much as possible," said James.

The crash came as a distinct blow to Jay "Ding" Darling, chief of the Biological Survey, for years an intimate friend of Rogers. When told of the fatal accident, he said:

"Rogers was the best political and social doctor the country ever had. There is not much too say—Will would say, if he were able, 'Don't let this, in any way, block the progress of aviation.'"

Post's Plane Was Known As 'Lockheed Orphan'

Los Angeles, Aug. 16 (U.P.).—The plane that carried Wiley Post and Will Rogers to death in Alaska was known at airports as the "Lockheed Orphan."

Post had bought a fuselage from one flier and wings from another to assemble a fast, rakish craft. The motor was new.

The wings and fuselage were made of molded spruce plywood. Post sat in a cockpit high in the nose and Rogers in a passenger compartment behind him.

Amelia Earhart Says Tragedy Won't Be Drawback to Aviation

Points Out Rogers and Post Were Doing Experimental Flying.

The deaths of Will Rogers and Wiley Post in an airplane crack-up Thursday evening near Point Barrow, Alaska, will have no appreciable effect on the average person's attitude toward flying, Amelia Earhart, America's outstanding woman aviator, believes.

She learned of the tragedy yesterday morning as she was riding in a taxi near the Capitol. The news came to her over the taxi's radio. As soon as possible Miss Earhart returned to her suite at the Carlton Hotel. She was, she explained a few minutes after arriving there, "greatly shocked."

She knew both men well, had discussed Post's proposed flight to Russia with him, had watched him take-off in his shiny new red monoplane from Los Angeles on the first leg of the flight a couple of weeks ago.

"Wiley and Will Rogers were doing experimental flying, which is naturally much more hazardous than routine transport flying," Miss Earhart pointed out. "Surely everyone understands the vast difference. Experimental flights are bound to be dangerous to a certain extent, but they are necessary if we are to go forward. Wiley gave his life for progress. He was one of the finest pilots this country ever had. The deaths of both men are a great loss to the whole world."

Miss Earhart came to Washington Thursday to attend a committee meeting of the National Youth Administration. She left yesterday afternoon by plane for California, planning to stop briefly in Cleveland on the way.

She is convinced flying in a transport is one of the safest modes of travel.

"The Department of Commerce's Bureau of Aeronautics is constantly making new regulations and trying out new devices to lessen whatever hazards might exist," she said. "Of course, there are some accidents. But look at the automobile accidents. Look at the fatal accidents from dozens of causes."

She paused.

"Living itself is full of hazards. To live life fully requires courage to take some risks. At least that's the way I see it."

estimated unofficially from various sources at $2,500,000, at least.

He carried life insurance totaling $1,050,000. His wife and children are beneficiaries of $1,000,000. The other $50,000 is payable to the Actors' Equity Fund. Provisions for double indemnity for accidental death were waived by Rogers because of his flying.

The value of Rogers' southern California real estate was estimated at nearly $1,000,000. He is reported to have had considerable cash and securities, also.

Laffoon Mourns Loss Of 2 Famous Colonels

Frankfort, Ky., Aug. 16 (A.P.).—Gov. Ruby Laffoon tonight mourned the loss of two of his most distinguished Kentucky colonels. Both Will Rogers and Wiley Post held commissions on the staff of the Blue Grass State's Chief Executive.

"Their tragic deaths were the greatest shock to me," he said, "and a loss to the entire world. Will was a personal friend of mine. He provided more clean and wholesome entertainment for the world than anyone else.

Solberg Finishes Hop.

Tragedy News Causes Tears In Hollywood

By the United Press.

Hollywood, Aug. 16. — Will Rogers left here for the Alaska flying adventure in which he died with an expression of faith in his pilot, Wiley Post.

"I don't know much about airplanes, but if Wiley is the pilot I don't need to know much," Will told friends.

The film colony read accounts of Will's death with universal sorrow. As his homely humor touched all—from Presidents and Kings to the humblest toiler—so tonight his death shocked not only producers and stars but prop boys, extra girls, studio carpenters.

Fred Stone Weeps.

Fred Stone, Rogers' closest personal friend, wept.

"The world has lost a great man and I have lost my best friend," Stone said.

Billie Burke, widow of Flo Zeigfeld, who "discovered" Rogers, said: "He was the kindest man in the world. I had known him for so many years—just starting out in the Follies. When my husband died Will was like a brother to me."

Along film lot roadways, stagehands told stories of the actor—how he would miss an important luncheon engagement to take a score of minor stage technicians to a teahouse, shocking sedate old ladies by appearing in overalls.

Camped With Workmen.

On location he wouldn't live at a hotel. He'd camp with workmen and ranch hands.

Prop No. 1 on every Will Rogers set was a goat which he used to practice roping.

Determination and Reticence Wiley Post's Dominant Traits

Pangborn Tells of Flier's Start on $2,000 Paid for Loss of Eye.

Editor's note: Clyde Pangborn, who knew Wiley Post from the days when both were obscure "barnstorming" fliers, pays tribute to the dead world-aviator in the following dispatch:

By Clyde Pangborn.

Copyright by the United Press.

New York, Aug. 16.—Wiley Post was a splendid man and one of the best pilots I've ever known. He hated to be balked and went to great pains to complete what he had started.

He was determined to make a successful stratosphere flight. I'm mighty sorry that fate pulled him down before he could make it.

To him a narrow escape was just another incident. Most of them probably will never be known because he avoided mentioning them even to close friends.

Although he never mentioned what he planned to do after his flight to Siberia "to hunt tigers" we all felt he probably would return to stratosphere flying.

He always wanted to do something that was unusual, and he had the stuff to carry it through.

After flying around the world with Harold Gatty, he determined to do it himself and did—clipping 21 hours off the record both of them set.

When a steel chip struck him in the left eye blinding him, instead of letting it ruin his life, he used the $2,000 he received to buy his own plane and take up aviation in earnest.

During his strato flight last December his oxygen valve clogged just after he reached 48,000 feet. For 30 minutes he battled to close the valve while the oxygen poured into his suit. Finally he shut it and prevented his suit from bursting.

I saw him after his Los Angeles-to-New York flight ended in Kansas and asked him about his escape. He shrugged his shoulders, laughed and said:

"I'd never have taken up stratosphere flying if I'd known how much trouble it was. But I've started it and I'll show them yet."

License of Post Plane Issued on August 8

Commerce Department data on the Rogers-Post plane showed it was licensed August 8, according to the Associated Press. It had a cabin with seats for three.

Licensed especially for long-distance flying and test work, it was of latest design and was scheduled for Post's use in flying to Siberia.

The board voted at the meeting to give a final warning to seven county beer operators to submit their monthly reports on time. Failure to comply with this regulation hereafter will result in a 30-day suspension of the license Ralph S. Fowler, chairman of the board, announced.

The board also held a hearing on the application of Mrs. Kate Woodworth for a license to sell beer in a tearoom at Aspen, Md. The board voted to defer action on the application until an investigation could be made after it developed that there was considerable opposition to the license.

Montgomery County Commissioners and election board officials yesterday journeyed to Baltimore to inspect a display of voting machines was passed at theETAOIN HRDLU It is planned to install these devices in the two suburban election precincts of the county, Wheaton and Bethesda.

The two suburban districts heretofore have required several days for tabulating election returns and have taxed the election officials greatly in mental and physical fatigue before the arduous task of counting ballots was completed.

Included in the party were County Commissioners Frank H. Karn, Charles E. King and Richard H. Lansdale, the members of the county supervisors of election board and F. Byrne Austin, former clerk to the election supervisors who first proposed installation of the machines to relieve the situation in the suburban precincts.

Prospects of an early revival of the ancient whipping-post penalty for wife-beating in Montgomery County were dismissed yesterday when Mrs. Thelma Oney dropped assault charges against her husband.

The case attracted considerable notoriety several weeks ago when Mrs. Oney appeared in Rockville with severe bruises and lacerations and charged her husband, Paul T. Oney, of Silver Spring, with assault and battery. At that time Judge Harold C. Smith, of Rockville Police Court, intimated that he might sentence Oney to the whipping-post if found guilty.

Mary F. Mann, of Takoma Park, Md., yesterday filed suit in the circuit court for Montgomery County, Md., for a limited divorce from Oscar Mann, also of Takoma Park.

The petition states that the couple was married in October 15, 1931, at Takoma Park, and have no children.

Mrs. Mann charges that on August 5, 1935, she was forcibly ejected from their summer home at Deal Beach (Md.) by the defendant and told never to return. The bill also charges that on the same day she was assaulted and beaten, and that on numerous occasions previous to that date he had threatened to kill her.

Mrs. Mann, who is represented by Attorneys Kenneth Lyddane and D. D. Lamond, asks the court to allow her alimony.

O. W. Poultry Group Fights Subsidy By Government

Acceptance of Federal Aid in Control Plan Scored by Northeast Unit.

In a resolution opposing Federal subsidies that involve the Government in competitive business, the Northeastern Poultry Producers Council, in session yesterday at the University of Maryland, condemned the practice of accepting Government aid.

The resolution declared that the poltrymen and not the Government should pay costs within the States of a proposed national uniform plan for poultry breeding and disease control.

Poultrymen in other sections of the country, according to the resolution, have proposed that the Federal Department of Agriculture allocate Federal funds to the several States to finance the proposed breeding and disease control plans within the States.

Inspection Costs.

Prof. James E. Rice, of Cornell University, president of the council, said the resolution was passed because of reports that efforts were being made to have the Federal Government assume costs of inspection service for record of performance associations, organizations of poultry breeders which now pay these costs themselves.

Cooperative efforts of farm owners was cited by Dr. Frank B. Bomberger, president of the Baltimore Bank for Cooperatives, as the only means of "paving the way toward a stimulating, satisfying, rural life in America."

He told the members that "if farmers will not plan their own business, then the national welfare will demand that it be planned for them."

He said that slip-shod, careless, unadjusted production, coupled with blind, reckless, competitive distribution, already have taken a terrible toll from the farmers of this country.

Cites Soundness.

As evidence of the soundness of farmers' cooperatives, Dr. Bomberger asserted that "no other type of business has withstood the assaults of the depression with as little loss."

"There has not been an important failure in the cooperative field since 1929 and the growth of cooperatives in numbers and membership has not been halted. There are approximately 11,000 cooperative associations in the United States, with a total membership of about 2,000,000, and between one-fifth and one-fourth of American farm products are marketed through these organizations."

The men had been working on a dredging project and were coming ashore for lunch when the accident occurred. They were only 50 feet from shore when thrown into the water.

According to the survivors, Reed, who was unable to swim, attempted to cling to the boat with Smith as the others set out for shore. Seeing Reed in trouble, Short returned to help him, but had to beat himself free when the struggling man almost pulled him under. Short then struck out for shore to get a boat.

Reed is said to have grabbed Smith, who was able to swim, and the two went down together.

ARLINGTON COUNTY BUREAU OF THE POST.
Tel. Cla. 500. Clarendon, Va.

Officials of Arlington County were uniting last night in a move to force action from the State Alcohol Beverage Control Board at Richmond to close county beer cafes at midnight.

While expressing hope that the ABC board might act without prompting, B. M. Smith, chairman of the county board, indicated that county residents might expect county officers to demand that something be done to amend a situation that he and other officials say has become intolerable.

Up to State Board.

Mr. Smith said he was speaking as an individual rather than as an officer of the county, but made it clear that his support could be expected for action by the board to close county beer dispensaries in conformity with regulations in the District.

Beer selling regulations in Virginia, it was pointed out, are entirely under the control of the State board, and some officials felt amendment of the State control act might be required.

Sheriff Howard B. Fields declared that he and Commonwealth's Attorney Lawrence W. Douglas have been working for "many months" to induce the ABC board to provide regulations they feel desirable.

It was understood also that petitions are being circulated throughout the country which would be sent to Richmond asking that regulations be changed. Beer, it was recalled, was one of the leading issues of the recent primary campaign.

Sheriff Fields proposed regulations that would force all persons selling beer to close at midnight, to reopen at 7 a. m., and close at midnight Saturday and stay closed until 7 a. m. Monday morning.

"Force all places in Arlington County to close as they now do in the District of Columbia and the citizens of the county will have no complaint, but, as long as persons can come into the county from Washington around 2 and 3 o'clock in the morning and get beer there is going to be trouble in the county," Fields declared.

Opening its fourteenth annual carnival with a huge parade Thursday night and attracting a large crowd to the grounds, the Arlington Post, No. 139, American Legion, again had a huge crowd last night.

With hundreds of colored lights about the grounds and the numerous stands filled with useful articles in addition to the many added carnival attractions, those attending last night hailed the event as a great success.

The closing feature tonight will be the beauty contest, when "Miss Arlington" will be chosen. The committee announces that there is still time to enter the contest, which they say is creating much interest in the county. The winner will be selected by acclamation.

A feature of the entertainment at Great Falls Park, Virginia, tonight will be the concert given by the Washington Gas Light Co. Band, with Otto Siebeneichen directing.

The band, organized four years ago, is believed to be the largest public utility band in the country.

Rolling Chapel Visits Capital And Priest Celebrates Mass

A missionary who takes his chapel wherever he goes arrived in the Capital yesterday for a week's visit, during which he will hold open house.

The chapel with all the features of a Roman Catholic Church was pulled into the Union Station yesterday morning, and its pastor, the Rev. Cornelius E. Murphy, immediately set about making plans for his first mass at 8 o'clock this morning.

Housed in a regular Pullman coach, the chapel was brought here from Baltimore, the most recent stop on a tour that has taken Father Murphy and his staff of assistants through the East in the last several months.

The visit to Washington really is to give Capital residents interested in church activities an opportunity to inspect a unique missionary enterprise, according to Father Murphy.

Had Long Journey.

"In the last few years I have traveled with this chapel to practically every railroad siding in America," said the priest. "We really are a missionary enterprise, but since the project is supported by Catholic societies throughout the country, we try to visit everywhere and give the people an idea of what we are doing."

This chapel formerly was the property of the Catholic Church Extension Society of Chicago, but now is the property of Bishop William J. Hafey of the Diocese of Raleigh, N. C., father Murphy explained. At the present time it is used principally for missionary work in Bishop Hafey's State, the tour through the East this summer being a visiting trip.

Except for two stained glass windows, the exterior of Father Murphy's chapel looks exactly like any Pullman coach. But inside are all the features of a church—pews for 70 persons, a complete, if compact, altar; a confessional and stations of the cross. All regular services and rites of the church may be administered there. In fact, Father Murphy says marriages and baptisms have been conducted.

Has Living Quarters.

Besides the chapel, the car contains living quarters for the priest. At the rear of the chapel is a library, a sleeping compartment, and a kitchenette. The library is used as a dining room and classroom as well.

Assisting Father Murphy in his missions are the Rev. T. A. Williams and Andrew J. Boyle, a student at Mount St. Mary's Seminary at Emmitsburg, Md.

Beginning today, mass will be celebrated each morning of the morning at 8 o'clock except Sunday morning. Throughout the week the chapel remaining at the Union Station, will be open to visitors.

Pulpit Assistant At First Baptist Going to China

Rev. Milner Brittain Given Release to Take College Post at Soochow.

The Rev. Milner C. Brittain, who came here last May from Louisville, Ky., to be assistant pastor at First Baptist Church, will leave this fall to take up new duties in the Orient.

Mr. Brittain yesterday accepted an appointment to teach English, athletics and music at Yates Academy, a boys' school at Soochow, China.

According to Dr. H. H. McMillan, a member of the Yates faculty, who made the appointment, Mr. Brittain was selected for the post through a newspaper story.

"When I arrived in Washington a few weeks ago, I read in one of the Washington newspapers about a young minister, just assigned here, who had ability, not only as a preacher, but as an orchestra leader and an athletic director," said Dr. McMillan. "I decided then that Mr. Brittain was just the man we wanted."

The appointment was made at Ridgecrest, N. C., where Mr. Brittain and Dr. McMillan have been attending the foreign mission board conference of the Southern Baptist Convention. The assistant pastor was subsequently released from the year's contract he was given at First Baptist Church.

Mr. Brittain will continue his work here through September, and will sail for the Orient in October.

Preaching at 7:45 p. m. services tomorrow, Mr. Brittain will speak on "A Divine Command."

In the morning the pulpit will be occupied by Dr. John A. Davison, Clarksville, Tenn., guest preacher. Members of Bethany and Grace Baptist Young Peoples Unions will be guests at the First Church Sunday evening, when the service will be led by the Devotional Life Commission. The topic will be "On Speaking Terms With God."

Metropolitan Baptist Church. The Rev. John Compton Ball, D. D., pastor. The Rev. Henry W. Tiffany, D. D., pastor of Park Place Baptist Church, Norfolk, will occupy the pulpit at both services. His theme for the morning will be "Christianity, an Experience," and for the evening, "Vital Values."

Prayer and Praise services will be at 8 p. m. Thursday with Mrs. William Hasker in charge.

Bethesda Baptist Church. The Rev. B. M. Osgood, pastor. R. W. Hambrook, of Washington, will be the speaker at the 8 p. m. Gospel service tomorrow. Mrs. Isabel G. Shelley, choir director, will have charge of the musical program.

John J. H. Pool, of Washington, will conduct the 11 a. m. service in the hall at 7002 Wisconsin avenue.

First Baptist Church, Hyattsville, Md. The Rev. B. P. Robertson, pastor. "My Church" will be the subject of Mr. Robertson's 11 a. m. sermon tomorrow. Before the evening congregation he will preach on "My Stewardship." The talk will be directed to the young people.

Old Testament Scenes Feature Bible Pageant

Former Congressman J. A. Garber to Take Principal Role at Harrisonburg.

The Biblical pageant of dramatized scenes from the Old Testament, to be staged on Tuesday, Wednesday and Friday of next week at Massanetta Springs, near Harrisonburg, Va., will be produced before one of the most representative audiences of Bible students ever gathered together in America.

Already crowds are arriving, according to directors of the pageant. Fifteen religious denominations will be represented.

The pageant is to be produced at night, with the 150-foot stage illuminated by batteries of flood lights. Several hundred participants garbed in authentic costumes will impersonate the patriarchs of Bible times with which the pageant deals.

Citizens from throughout this part of the Valley of Virginia have been drafted to take part, and rehearsals of the various episodes have been under way for the past ten days.

Former Representative J. A. Garber has been assigned one of the most imporatnt roles in the production. He is to depict the role of "The Chronicler," and will portray this symbolic part as the sage of Biblical history from his station on a raised dias on the side of the stage. Clad in the classic robe of a medieval scholar, and reading from a great scroll, the chronicler will interpret the scene about to be enacted on the stage to his right.

Mr. Garber is a graduate of the Emerson School of Oratory and Dramatic Art in Boston, Mass., and was selected for this part in the Biblical Pageant because of his unusual dramatic ability and his impressive far-reaching voice.

Folded Wings.

One plane-crash, where Alaskan soil boarders the frozen Arctic Ocean, has killed two friends whose ages, careers and temperaments were very different. Yet both Will Rogers and Wiley Post were exemplars of the pioneering spirit which Americans love, and both had risen by natural talents from obscurity to reputations more than national.

Post won his way entirely through the air, and by sheer daring. This Texas farmer's son vaulted the tedious hurdles which obstruct most aviators' progress. He broke all limitations of time and space, first by flashing around the globe in less than nine days with Harold Gatty as co-pilot, then by making that same circuit solo, almost within the confines of a week. As an explorer of the stratosphere his contribution to aviation can not yet be properly assessed.

He was poor, this Magellan of the air, and he was handicapped by semi-blindness. He soared above a pedestrian globe in what many experts considered a ramshackle craft. But he possessed, or was possessed by, a spirit which mocked all limitations. His personality was perhaps best expressed by the use he made of the compensation he received when he lost his left eye. With the money he bought a second-hand airplane and flew to fame.

Rogers rose more slowly. He was born in Oklahoma when it was the Indian Territory. He was raised on the ranges. Not until he neared his third decade did he achieve his first applause—and he won it in vaudeville on a roof-garden. A dry, gum-chewing cow-puncher, engaged to perform marvels with a lariat, he elected to punctuate his "turn" by a few caustic comments on the day's news. They took. In an age of ballyhoo his deflationary wisecracks helped to preserve the national balance. Solemnity, pomposity and sham were all defenseless before his searching thrusts.

As Post caught the eye of the world, so Rogers captured its ear. Even when he passed from stage to screen, and supplemented the spoken by the printed word, his appeal held up. For his wit was as finely attuned to the iconoclastic spirit of America as was the daring of Wiley Post to the national love of untrammeled adventure. Both men, by different approaches, found their way to the heart of the country.

If this tragedy had to be, it is altogether fitting that Will Rogers and Wiley Post should have gone together on the expedition from which there is no return. Together they represented the vital qualities which keep this Nation steady in a wind-swept age. And the fact that these two friends were so popular is itself evidence that the country is not deprived of the virtues which they embodied, and for which they were loved.

Useful WPA Projects.

Under the WPA a good deal of useless labor has been deviously devised, and a good deal of adverse criticism has been richly justified. Recently, however, there have been announced three local plans which should serve as an example to both the executives and the beneficiaries of the Works Progress Administration.

The tuberculosis survey approved by the District WPA project board is an undertaking that medical authorities have looked forward to for years. If properly conducted under the guidance of the health department, this check on victims of tuberculosis should be a most important step toward curbing that plague. If the cost of the survey—$101,000—appears high, the figure must be balanced against the disgraceful neglect of this disease in Washington for a long period.

Out of the Federal funds allocated to Virginia, Richmond authorities propose to employ a considerable part upon projects that, though destined to operate in the Old Dominion, might very well have been laid upon the Capital's doorstep. These schemes are the improvement of the District of Columbia's reformatory at Lorton, as well as the District's workhouse at Occoquan—both standing on Virginia soil—and the construction of a sewage-disposal plant to end the institutions' pollution of neighboring waters.

Each of these projects may be expected to promote the community welfare in most vital particulars. Conditions at the reformatory have been no less a scandal than the continued neglect of tuberculosis. They have provoked one mutiny, and overcrowding of vicious criminals in an institution never intended for such inmates leads to constant fear of another. No argument is needed to justify the construction of plants to end the pollution of streams about the Capital City.

If all WPA projects were as positively beneficial to the people they will serve as are these, only the question of finance would fix a limit upon the sums which might be properly spent.

It Stands Out.

In one major respect the tax bill passed by the Senate is an improvement over the House measure. It eliminates the proposed inheritance taxes, although it sharply increases existing estate duties as a partial offset. On the whole, however, the Senate Finance Committee made a bad job even worse by its hurried week-end effort to bring the measure back into line with the President's recommendations.

The constructive La Follette amendments, designed to lower income tax exemptions and extend surtaxes into the lower brackets, were decisively rejected. And as adopted the Senate bill limits surtax increases to incomes of over $1,000,000, as contrasted with the more inclusive House surtaxes which begin at $50,000. The graduated scale of taxes upon corporate income, and the 15 per cent levy on intercorporate dividends, carried by the Senate bill, again emphasize the intention to discriminate against large corporations and holding companies, in accordance with the President's wishes.

The only important relevant amendment to the tax bill as reported out of the Finance Committee is that sponsored by Senator Borah, prohibiting future issues of tax-exempt Federal obligations. With drastic increases in surtaxes in prospect, it is obviously inconsistent for the Government to increase the volume of tax-exempt securities affording a legal means of escape from such impositions. Nevertheless, it seems unlikely that the Borah amendment will survive in conference. There will be strong Administration opposition to a change that would add to the cost of the Treasury's borrowing program and encourage States and municipalities to increase the volume of their own tax-exempt offerings. The Federal Government will hardly take the initiative in eliminating its own tax-exempt issues so long as it is prevented by constitutional obstacles from imposing taxes upon State and municipal issues.

In addition to the Borah amendment, the Senate bill carries a highly undesirable rider, offered by Senator McCarran and passed without debate, which would repeal the 50 per cent tax on silver-trading profits, and re-establish a free silver market in the United States. The proposal is being urged on the ground that foreigners are now profiting at the expense of American interests due to restrictions that have shifted silver transactions abroad.

Of course, an extension of the area of speculative dealings to embrace this country would make it extremely difficult for the Treasury to resist the pressure to "boost" silver prices more rapidly and would handicap it in efforts to acquire silver on the best possible terms. The mere fact that the silver-bloc Senators are pushing the McCarran amendment in the hope that it will bring rapid price advances, and ultimate remonetization of silver, explains why the Treasury must oppose this change.

Even if the conference committee chooses the lesser of two evils in every case of conflict, the resulting compromise measure is certain to be bad. Opponents of the Administration, cognizant of the shortcomings of this misnamed revenue bill, will be all too apt to take cynical comfort in the hope of Senator Hastings that it will "stand out as one of the Roosevelt accomplishments."

Help For The Railroads.

On Thursday the House passed without record vote the Sumners bill amending the bankruptcy act to facilitate railroad reorganization. Changes in that act were made two years ago for a similar purpose, but they proved unsatisfactory because of the opportunities afforded dissenting minorities to hold up reorganization plans. Consequently Co-ordinator Eastman has strongly urged further amendments to overcome these difficulties and facilitate the scaling of debt charges.

The first of the Administration's railroad measures, recently approved by Congress, provides for the interstate regulation of trucks and buses. Of equal and more immediate importance is the present bill, now awaiting Senate action. Hasty passage would not in this case indicate any lack of care in preparation of remedial legislation, since the bill has been most thoughtfully discussed in prolonged committee hearings.

From 40,000 to 50,000 miles of railroad are now in receivership. Under existing laws a great waste of time and money is involved in attempts at reorganization. The present bill is intended to be a "short cut" method of rehabilitating these bankrupt roads with due regard for the interests of the various groups of investors and creditors.

Since the Class I railroads failed to earn their fixed charges by approximately $60,000,000 during the first half of the present year, the need for relief through debt scaling is evident. That alone will not solve the problems of the railroads due to loss of traffic, bad business, and operating deficiencies. Nevertheless, along with the legislation already passed, it would be a great aid to their permanent rehabilitation.

The New Panama Treaty.

In line with the "good neighbor" policy of the Roosevelt Administration in dealing with Latin America, a new basic treaty between the United States and Panama is nearing completion. For a number of years Panama has regarded the existing treaty of 1904 as outworn. Moreover, commercial and financial problems affecting the two governments have accumulated in recent months. The new treaty is likely to be regarded favorably, therefore, in both Washington and the City of Panama.

The surprising thing is not that a new treaty has been drawn to replace the pact of 1904, but that the agreement arrived at then should have stood so long. When the United States began negotiations for the right to build a canal linking the Atlantic and Pacific, Panama was a rebellious province of Colombia. Under the Granadine Confederation Panama had been an independent state. But she later returned to the confederation and in 1886 was reduced to an unwilling administrative unit of the Bogota government. The result was a series of abortive uprisings lasting until 1903, the year in which the Hay-Herran treaty giving the United States the right to build the canal was signed.

Shortly after a special session of the Colombian Congress had adjourned without ratifying the canal treaty a new revolution broke out in Panama and the independence of that country was established with the aid of American marines. Under the treaty of 1846 the United States claimed a dubious right to keep the isthmus open, and sought to justify intervention on the ground that civil war in Panama would have closed it. The subsequent hasty recognition of the new Panama government and the quick negotiation of the existing treaty with that country, even before it had established a constitutional government, is not the most wholesome chapter in American history.

Replacement of the treaty negotiated under these circumstances will be gratifying to all Latin America. Twelve years ago Congress voted to pay Colombia $25,000,000, ostensibly in settlement of claims, but actually to mollify that country's resentment against our drastic intervention in 1903. Now the State Department has agreed to withdraw the American guarantee of Panama's independence and to relinquish any right to preserve order in Colon and Panama City. Agreement also seems to have been reached as to the rights of the Canal Zone commissary to sell provisions to civilian employes.

The Administration has also recognized its obligation to pay the annual rental for the Canal Zone in gold, or its equivalent in devalued dollars. Probably the Administration's embarrassment over Panama's incontestable case here has hastened the negotiations. It removes from the public eye an unwelcome reminder of the broader implications of dollar devaluation. Whatever the impetus, however, the treaty is welcome as an important step in building a Latin American policy based on the political equality and territorial integrity of the nations of the Western Hemisphere.

Demagogic Strategy.

Yesterday's meeting of the conference committee on the utilities bill tends to confirm Representative Huddleston's charge that an agreement is being frustrated by "political factors." Under the leadership of Senator Wheeler the conferees of the Senate again balked at any compromise acceptable to the House. Apparently the Montana Savonarola believes that the seeds of partisanship can be more effectively cultivated by permitting the bill to die amid a resounding attack upon the disreputable actions of utility lobbyists.

As Mr. Huddleston has pointed out, the bill in question would be a drastic regulatory measure even without the death clause for "unnecessary" holding companies. If the two houses of Congress are unable to agree upon a rational and constructive substitute for the highly controversial provisions written into their separate bills, this entire section still could be eliminated without impairing the basic value of the legislation. But the utility-baiters of the Senate grow indignant over such a suggestion. It is not the welfare of the public which actuates them, but the political advantages which they believe may be gained by arousing an uninformed and undiscriminating mob temper.

If the holding company bill fails, it will be because these politicians think constructive regulation of the utility corporations will deprive them of a vote-catching campaign issue. That, of course, is a purely demogagic attitude. Moreover, it strengthens a suspicion, already widespread, that the chief objective of the group which is sponsoring this destructive proposal is to enhance their own political fortunes rather than to protect either investors or the public.

One of the most regrettable aspects of Will Rogers' death is that he will not be able to make a philosophical crack about the tragedy which the rest of the country is discussing.

What Italy needs is some messenger boys to solicit anti-war telegrams to Mussolini at 3 cents each.

"A New Interest In Life."

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: I have often wondered who the Post-Impressionist is, since his column is one of my favorites; and now that our lovable William Lyon Phelps mentions him handsomely in his daily article my woman's curiosity is satisfied. From now on I shall feel a warmer interest in Mr. Kaufmann as an individual.

His kindly quizzical, provocative—shall I call them essays?—add a special flavor to my toast and coffee; and, too, in the evenings when we girls get together for a chat, his stuff becomes the subject engaging our conversation. You know these days are strenuous, get on one's nerves. He leads us away from the drabber things and appeals to our better nature, to whatever of culture that is in us. He brings back to mind our school days and all the high and mighty things of literary weight the professor was wont to call to our attention. Now that we are grown older, these refreshing thoughts of Mr. Kaufmann give a new interest in life and an intriguing desire to brush up—to, in turn, become provocative, and therefore more sprightly among friends.

May he live long and prosper.

Washington, Aug. 15.

A Correspondent Dissents.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: I cannot agree with your editorial, "The Forgotten Warning," that appeared in the issue of August 15, relative to the restoration of pensions to veterans of the Spanish-American War.

By his approval of the bill you charge the President with an "abandonment of the principle for which he stood when politics was a less influential factor in White House counsels." I don't think the President was influenced by any political consideration whatsoever. As a matter of fact it required more courage to approve the bill than to veto it, notwithstanding that it had been passed by only one dissenting vote, and that vote in the Senate. Nor was the President's statement of his reasons for the approval of the bill an "apology."

The bill passed in the preceding Congress restoring three-fourths of such pensions was vetoed by him and repassed over such veto. However, such three-fourths restoration was not the only matter involved in the bill.

An examination of the last-mentioned bill, and the veto message incident thereto, if rightly understood, will disclose the President's true reason for his approval of the measure just passed.

Will Rogers.

Farewell, Will,
Nothing can kill
A spirit so equipped
With stuff to find the rift
In gloom.
Even the tomb
Shall not detract so much
From your fine touch
Of humor keen.
From which we'll ever glean
A magic power
When dark clouds lower,
To know their power
Is nil.
Yes, farewell, Will,
Thy voice is still;
Thy pen—than sword more able—
Lies quiet on the table.
But, strong as any cable,
It girds, from sea to sea,
The globe and constant beams
Its wisdom, wit and gleams
Of subtle sense.
We can't commence
To do his talent quite
Its justice, but we might
And do engage to pay
In this word-tribute way
A bit of the large debt
We owe Will Rogers yet.

Borah For President.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Mr. Lucas, of the Republican National Committee, is anxious to know whom the Republican leaders desire as their nominee for President in 1936. Might it not be better first to find out whom the rank and file of the American electorate desire as their candidate for 1936? Chairman Fletcher has raised the cry: "Save the Constitution." This is all very well and good, but why did not Mr. Fletcher cry a little sooner? Does not Mr. Fletcher know that it was the repeal of the eighteenth amendment which jeopardized the Constitution and paved the way for so much unconstitutional legislation?

If the Republican Party is wise they will not nominate a man who has just discovered that the Constitution is in danger, but one who is a real statesman and not a mere politician; they will nominate the best fitted man for the Presidency, not only in the Republican Party, but in the Nation as well; they will nominate one who has given the best years of his life in the service of his country; they will nominate a man who understands the Constitution and who is and has always been one of its ablest defenders; they will nominate America's most distinguished statesman—the Hon. William Edgar Borah, of Idaho, dean of the United States Senate.

I favor the nomination of Senator Borah because, first of all, he is a patriot and not a party-ot and his word can be relied upon. I favor Mr. Borah because more than anyone else he has been instrumental in keeping this country out of the World Court and foreign entanglements. I favor Mr. Borah because he believes in justice for the former service men and payment of the soldiers' bonus.

Protests Dog Act.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: With great indignation I read in The Post this morning an account of the death of a little fox terrier dog forced to jump or thrown from a plane for the amusement of a crowd at an air circus at Danville, Va., yesterday. Attached to the dog was a harness and parachute. The parachute failed to open during the descent and the innocent little fellow crashed to the earth and was killed.

Why officials will tolerate or permit such exhibitions is difficult to understand and I trust that should a similar performance be scheduled for Washington the Humane Society will prohibit the act, and arrest and punish by fine the owner of the show.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: I must congratulate The Post and the man who wrote the story on that excellent piece of writing on page 1 on Thursday, August 8. I mean that feature story, of course, about the rainy evening. It was the sort of thing that gives distinction, character, flavor and individuality to the paper. Please tell the man who wrote it what a grand job I think he did. It's the best piece of writing I have seen in a newspaper in a long, long time.

I am glad you have Pegler. He fits into the paper and helps it. I have long liked his stuff. He can write, too.

From Relief Back To Work.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Please allow me space in your paper to reply to John Davidson, who, like the "Fighting Transient," seems to feel that since I took no sides on the matter of the man on relief, I must be against him. Such is not the case, for I am entirely in sympathy with any man who can not, after an earnest attempt, find employment.

But, as far as I can see, these men who are receiving aid from the Government fail to understand even the meaning and the implications of the word "relief." To relieve does not necessarily mean to cure; it means, in this case, aid of a temporary nature, and temporary relief can not be expected to be either permanent or fully adequate. Of course this relief work does not provide a wage that will allow a man all the comforts of a normal living! It is meant, I believe, to provide the relief client with enough to keep him alive until this unfortunate depression should end.

As it is, the Government is spending more than it can really afford to spend in providing what relief it does. I think that any taxpayer can testify to that, especially with the knowledge that the United States Government is now attempting to meet its obligations while it is laboring under a debt of over $28,000,000,000. Under such conditions, it seems to me that those on relief might well marvel that such an institution as the FERA even exists to give them the bit which they feel to be insufficient.

Mr. Davidson says that the man who finds his work where he can is now as extinct as the dodo, and is now what I chose to call, in my former letter, "the professional relief man." I say that this is not so. Two months ago, I was unemployed, nor did I have any prospect of being employed, but I have a job now. To be sure, it is not a high-pay job, but it has a future. The pay is but a few dollars more than the $11.25 a week which the FERA is now paying, and it is not the $95-a-month job that is the cause of strikes in some parts of the country, and yet I do not feel that my employer should pay me more, nor do I feel that the job is worth more. In short, I do not propose to strike for higher wages nor yell for a better job! Perhaps this is a new idea, and the idea of the man who does strike against such a situation is the old and traditional idea.

The Post Impressionist

Young Love At Geneva.

Post Office, Saturday.

MOST of the world is cynical and selfish—two terms with but a single thought. Most of the world (so most of the world assures us) has turned a cold shoulder and a bleak back upon Romance. Most of the world is preoccupied with the depression and the war-threats that the depression fathers.

Most of the world: yet not—we are happy to note—quite all of it.

* * *

For there remains at least one city where the youth and the maid still sigh to the moon—and for each other. Where boys and girls still court in the shade of the sheltering palm—or the plane-tree, anyhow. Where they still believe there's nothing half so sweet in life as love's young dream.

* * *

It's the city on which, more than on any spot of this gray earth—not excepting the Scotch lowlands—ascetic John Calvin, set and left forever his mark of emotional repression.

It's the city wherein delegates from all the governments of this earth get together solely to immerse themselves in those unromantic problems that the rest of us consider the assassins of sentiment: the dry statesmen, the drier economists, the dry-as-dust technicians of the League of Nations.

In short, the last stronghold of Romance is Geneva, Switzerland.

* * *

Listen, and see if you don't agree that a far more fitting line would be, "Love me, and the world is mine!"

* * *

About two years ago there came to the University of Geneva a student called, we'll say, Hercule Mollrad. He entered the law school: as his future proved, an odd scholastic selection.

He was not Genevese. He was not, indeed, a Swiss. However, there are characters entirely Swiss in this idyl, Hercule soon caught the spirit of his environment. He soon caught, also, first the attention and then the affections of——

Yes, it is of what he did to them that we would speak.

* * *

Hercule was handsome; Hercule was eloquent; he was very early in his twenties. He fell in love—ah, but how deeply, how tenderly, how passionately!—with a wealthy resident's fair daughter: a maiden whom you shall know by the name of Annabelle V. And his affections were returned. They were returned with interest, not to say enthusiasm and usury. They loved with a love that was more than love: H. and Annabelle V.

* * *

True love—its course soon became troubled. There was another, a more lowly lady, who sued Hercule: something about an infant. Annabelle's fussy father gave commands: his daughter should never again see or communicate with Hercule. A superfussy court banished Hercule from the canton.

He disappeared.

* * *

But think not he forgot. Months passed; Annabelle pined: in Geneva they can still do that. Then, from just across the French frontier, at Annemasse, came a 'phone call. Her Romeo's voice! He was ill—ill from love of her. Wouldn't she come to him?

The old, old struggle between love and duty! She must obey her father. "But only this once—and only to bid me an eternal farewell?"

Geneva is not so blue as Calvin painted it: Annabelle sneaked off to Annemasse . . .

* * *

Followed the tender tryst.

Hercule didn't look quite such a wan lover as his wire-message might have indicated. But what would you? Her mere arrival had brought the roses back to his cheeks; she was the light of his eyes, and his eyes were lightened.

Yes, sir—for this final moment.

They would take one last stroll in the woods. Then they would say a resolute good-by, a fond farewell. And if forever, still forever fare you well!

* * *

Too soon the golden moments slipped. Too swiftly the aureate sands sped downward in the hourglass. Good-by forever!

Would she kiss him good-by forever?

Wouldn't she!

* * *

And, as she surrendered to that fond embrace, the fond embracer bit off the end of her nose.

"I love you with my whole heart!" he cried. "Now let that ga-ga old father of yours find you a husband—if he can!"

* * *

Annabelle was taken to the hospital, where Hercule had reserved a room for her. The broken-hearted Hercule was taken to jail.

* * *

You don't believe it? Well, the case is now on trial before the criminal court of Haute Savoie.

The Tragic Era

By

Claude G. Bowers

Following are excerpts from "The Tragic Era," by Claude G. Bowers, reprinted by permission of the publishers, Houghton Mifflin Co.

The Old Society Passes.

MEN of real distinction walked the avenue without attracting notice and were overlooked by the hostesses. One, too picturesque to escape attention, was frequently met on the street, tall, vigorous, portly, with bright eyes and florid complexion, swinging along like an athlete, and looking like Santa Claus, with his flowing beard. "There goes Walt Whitman," a young lady is heard saying to her companion. She turns curiously. "And is THAT the author of 'Leaves of Grass'?" she says. "I might have known it," for "Leaves of Grass" made him quite impossible, socially, and Harlan, Johnson's Secretary of the Interior, and a high priest of his church, had sanctimoniously made it the pretext for dismissing the poet from his department. Now a clerk in the office of the Attorney General, he, of necessity, lives cheaply, merely "roosting," as he said, in a tiny room of a lodging house and eating in the cheaper restaurants. By day and night he may be seen striding along on long rambles which take him into the country, and from his little nook of an office, with pictures of Tennyson and John Burroughs over his desk, he can look out over the river to the Virginia hills, and upon the unfinished Washington Monument.

It was about the time that a breezy Westerner lingered a while in the rooms of Senator Stewart at Fourteenth and F streets, to terrorize the landlady with his carelessness with matches and tobacco and to find infinite amusement in the Vanity Fair that had no interest in Mark Twain. Julia Ward Howe would run in and out of the town, to be courted by the old Abolitionists and Radicals, and Gail Hamilton, plain, short, plump, with curls of light hair clustering around her head, was invited to dinners because of her intimacy with the Blaines, but there was little literary atmosphere in the Washington of those times.

IN a prosy little cottage in Georgetown, by the canal, dwelt a short-sighted, absent-minded little woman writing reams for Bonner's "Ledger," but the stories of Mrs. Southworth have no association with literature. Anna Dickinson, who wrote and lectured, was socially acceptable in political circles, for had she not thundered on the stump? Those with an artistic urge found their way occasionally to the studio of Vinnie Ream, to see her "Miriam," but she had lost caste with the politicians during the impeachment.

Ever and anon, the politicians had a literary evening with a John W. Forney in his apartments at "The Mills House" on Capitol Hill, and, let it be recorded as part payment for his sins, the poets and painters were invited, and he had a real salon. There one might meet Thad Stevens and Grant; Prentice, of the Louisville Courier-Journal; and Joseph Medill, of the Chicago Tribune; Elliott, the portrait painter, and Brady, the photographer of the war; and see Edwin Forrest and hear him recite. For there were recitations, vocal and instrumental music, and good conversation, and there were memories hovering about the rooms, for Lincoln had been a guest.

THE old was passing, or had passed, and a new society had preempted the field. One day the old house where Sue Decatur played her harp, and Mrs. Livingston charmed the gravest men, and her daughter, Cora, was driven beneath the mistletoe by Van Buren, and Clay nursed his disappointment, was reopened with a blaze of glory at a dinner costing $150 a plate. The salads were served in dishes of ice, and Roman punches in beautifully cut ice goblets. Gen. Fitzgerald Beale, bringing his gold from California, with two dashing daughters, had taken the Decatur house, whence one of the girls sallied forth in colonial costume to the fascination of King Kalakaua, and another issued to delight all promenaders by strolling about with a Scotch staghound, the size of a small pony, the gift of a foreign nobleman.

In 1868, Henry Adams thought "Lafayette Square was society," since "within a few hundred yards . . . one found all one's acquaintances," and "beyond the Square the country began." But that was Henry Adams' society, and the other was not so circumscribed. At that time the invasion of the rich and fashionable had not begun, and "no literary or scientific man, no artist, no gentleman without office . . . had lived there." Few in the social set had known the society of a great city, and "the happy village was innocent of a club." On bright spring mornings society fared forth to the Pennsylvania Station to see its friends depart. An easy society it was, simple, human, almost genial, able to find amusement "without houses or carriages or jewels or toilettes, or pavements or shops." Such the almost pastoral picture of the Capital in the last year of Johnson's stormy administration.

The Cuckoo

By

William Lyon Phelps

I REFER to the English cuckoo; for though in America we have the yellow-billed cuckoo, there is nothing remarkable about them, and we do not care very much whether they decline or not. The American cuckoo has nothing unusual either in its voice or habits, and its morality is Victorian; it builds its own nests.

But the cuckoo that plays such a part in British literature sings exactly like a cuckoo-clock, only you can't train him to strike right.

In a recent number of an English newspaper, I found an article about him that aroused my interest, not only in him, but in many things.

For more than 2,000 years this bird has been observed in Europe. He will watch any number of other and smaller birds build their nests; he is a gangster; he does not care where his money comes from, so long as he can successfully steal it. When the smaller bird has laid an egg or two, the cuckoo "removes an egg in its beak, and substitutes just one of its own in each particular nest."

The writer (London Times, May 31, 1935) says:

"What sort of a world is this in which such a mode of living can be ingrained in the life of a creature, and what light can it throw upon the place of morals in the universe? Do certain courses of action entail certain consequences? In Nature, it is said, there are no punishments, but only consequences."

Now the original sin of the original cuckoo consisted in making some other bird do all the housework and family rearing; the next cuckoo said, Why not? and finally the cuckoos all lost the power of nest-building; and we know that habit can finally change bodily form.

The ancestry of the cuckoo was exceedingly good, both physically and mentally. It came from a clever and powerful race of birds, far advanced intellectually. And its success as a gangster seems to have aroused the admiration of other birds, instead of their detestation—very similar to something else you can remember. For the fledgling heaves the true heirs out of their inheritance and even out of their home, and seems to be admired for their robbery, even by the foster-parents, who believe that nothing succeeds like success.

Debunking Decibels

New York City's War On Noise Is Noisiest On Record As Mayor La Guardia Promises Quiet Nights—Harlem's Senior Prophet Is Defied, But Bides His Time.

By Ralph E. Renaud.

Special Correspondence to The Post.

EVERY so often New York finds itself in the midst of an anti-noise campaign. A blessed quiet is about to descend on the city, but never does. And the odd part of it is that these campaigns always occur in the summer, when the good burghers have their windows open. In the winter the antinoise drive always seems to fold up and go quietly to sleep, joining the coatless campaign for men, in a seasonal hibernation.

There is a drive on against noise just at present. It is the noisiest drive which has yet taken place. The decibels, which, if you don't know, are units of sound, are getting it in the neck. Most of the city officials including Mayor LaGuardia, are shouting at the tops of their voices about how quiet everything is going to be when the metropolis gets its "noiseless nights." And the cynic can't help wondering where those noiseless subway cars are which were so widely advertised about five years ago.

• • • •

There is quite an active antinoise league of important citizens which perhaps, for simplicity's sake, should be called merely the Noise Committee. The gentleman at the head of it, who has run unsuccessfully for office, but who has been running national publicity campaigns ever since, happens to be traveling in Europe, finding out how things sound over there. Reading the newspapers, they sound rotten to most people. But he is on his way back—and what a nuisance! You see, in the meantime, Mayor LaGuardia, feeling hot and irritable, started and antinoise campaign of his own. Naturally the official Noise Shutter-Uppers have got to co-operate, even if it means leaving Europe in the midst of some highly interesting soundings.

Automobile horns seem to be Public Enemy No. 1 at the moment. Of course, the official noise drive isn't supposed to get under way until October 1, just when everybody's windows are beginning to close, but in the meanwhile the general ballyhoo is to be kept at concert pitch.

This week, for instance, an automobile will be sent from the battery to Harlem without blowing its horn once, just to see what will happen. Naturally, nothing will happen unless a few people get run over, which is scarcely a happening any more. Then a day or so later the same automobile will be run from the battery to Harlem blowing it horn almost all the way, again just to see what will happen. It can safely be predicted that a large number of people will develop cases of jitters and jumps and the driver of a certain car may get bounced over the conk. But this in itself would be a conclusive demonstration of how quiet New York can be made for a given individual.

Another item in the antinoise campaign is that the city is going to invest in a fleet of noiseless sanitary wagons, probably resembling the famous noiseless subway cars in many of their specifications. It is explained that the old, bad sanitary wagons which make such a clatter are a heritage from the old, bad Tammany administration which also made quite a clatter.

The new wagons, or trucks, are to be streamlined and chormium-plated garbage retainers. If the first 20 don't tick too loudly the sanitary department is going to buy a thousand or so more. Indeed, your correspondent will bet a cantaloupe rind in fairly good condition against a plate of ham and beans that the sanitary department buys its thousand trucks anyway and that they make just as much noise as ever. They are going to be gadgeted with "icebox doors." You know how an icebox door sounds when you slam it.

There are actually rumors that the noiseless subway cars are running somewhere or other in the city. But they must be making secret trips as far as your correspondent is concerned. They haven't taken the decibel recorder into the subway yet but they are carting it hither and yon about the streets. Despite all previous antinoise campaigns New York proves to be just as noisy as ever, with the exception of Radio Row which has modulated its tone a little.

This was a downtown street of cheap radio shops, but as no one ever went there who didn't like that sort of thing it is hard to see what difference it made. You couldn't hear it uptown. What you did near was the radios, all of terrific lung power, which insensitive oafs purchased on Radio Row and installed in uptown apartments. In Paris the police have a nice way of disposing of people like that. On the first complaint they are warned. On the second offense the police seal the radio for a few days. On the third they take the instrument away for a good, long "rest." Over here nothing happens. The neighbors just curse. But this is America where everyone has a right to express his opinion—even somebody else's opinion, and over the radio.

Well, here's success to the antinoise drive. May it never grow silent!

Motorists using the toll bridges into New York and the vehicular tunnel under the river have been getting sharp electric shocks when they passed over their change to the guards in the booths. This led to a good deal of argument. Naturally, the drivers thought the police were clowning and the shocks were practical jokes practiced at their expense. It was useless for the police to explain that they, too, were shocked and resented the charge. This just led to confusion and misunderstanding.

What happens, and it invariably happens when the driver has his foot on the brake, is that static electricity which has accumulated in the car is discharged through the coin which passes into the change-taker's hand. All sorts of methods were tried to eliminate the shock but they all failed. Now they have a gadget which does the trick. It is a steel brush, made of strips of highly flexible steel such as are used in a street sweeper's broom. It stands in the roadway so that the bumpers of a car will graze it just as the automobile rolls up to the change booth. The static runs into the ground before it has a chance to pounce on the motorist's half dollar. And everybody is happy.

Father Divine, Supreme Divinity of Harlem, is in trouble. The only way of tackling such an eccentric phenomenon was through some member of his own race, and now another black prophet has come forward to challenge his God-head.

Father Divine's rival describes himself merely as "Prophet Costumie." He is a brisk and dapper young man who appeared in Brooklyn from somewhere out in Utah, where prophet-manufacturing is a regularly established business. People who have seen him say that he hears a faint resemblance to Rexford Guy Tugwell, also a prophet. But Prophet Costumie goes right to the heart of Father Divine's domination over his flock.

A couple of judges before whom Father Divine was brought happened to pass on in the fullness of their years. Father Divine's followers say he looked on them unkindly. Indeed, they come right out and say he killed them. So Prophet Costumi rises on the platform and dares Father Divine to kill him. His audience goes into ecstasies at such superb daring.

Nothing has happened—yet. The Prophet is still alive, brisk and dapper. Father Divine says he "ain't got no time to bother with such stump knockers" To his disciples that is perfectly satisfactory. It means merely that the time will come.

Children's Unit Closed At Central Library

So, in order that the staff may shake off the sultriness of the city, the department will be closed from Monday through September 2, Dr. George F. Bowerman, public librarian, announced yesterday.

Children's service, however, Dr. Bowerman said, will be given in all branch libraries.

The WPA Labor Issue.

From the Brooklyn Daily Eagle.

The sharp decline in the number of WPA workers remaining away from their relief jobs is accepted by most critical observers as the first step in the collapse of the so-called strike against the Government.

It is not surprising that the average workers should be slow to give up their jobs, especially when it is considered that their pay, although not at the "prevailing wage," for which unionists have been fighting, is considerably higher than the dole on which they and their families have been subsisting over varying periods, and that they may even face the loss of any home relief if they persist in their present position.

Actually, Gen. Hugh Johnson had no alternative but to stand pat on the arbitrarily fixed scales which were based on the theory of giving work to the greatest possible number of men with the $4,880,000,000 fund made available by the Administration.

It must be borne in mind that this is not a strike in the true sense; that there is no strikebreaking involved, and that the disgruntled workers are in such a position that they can back down from their present stand with no loss of prestige. It is difficult to see in this ill-advised movement any clear-cut issue involving the rights of capital and labor.

Free Press Safe Press.

From the San Francisco Chronicle.

Once more we are reminded that a censored press is an even greater nuisance to the government which censors it than a freely critical press would be.

The British government has complained to the Italian government regarding violent anti-British articles in the Italian press, for which, because that press is censored, the government can not evade responsibility. If there have been equally offensive anti-Italian articles in the free press of England, the Italians could make this complaint only to the editors concerned.

Just because the British press is free, the government can be held to no responsibility for it. And the American Government was never embarrassed, even in the days when twisting the British lion's tail was the favorite pastime of certain newspapers.

The safest press is a free press.

The price of hogs has been forced up to $12 a hundredweight, and if to this is added the processing tax, the cost to the packers will be about $13.25 The so-called "parity" price of 1926 was $12.40.

AAA Will Seek Early Decision On Its Validity

Amendments Spur Officials to Welcome Quick Disposal of 1,180 Lawsuits Again

By the Associated Press.

Newly armored with AAA amendments, Federal farm officials said yesterday they would go into battle for quick disposition of the 1,180 suits that are contesting the validity of processing taxes.

Seth Thomas, solicitor for the Department of Agriculture, said "we will welcome the most speedy determination of all questions involved that can be had."

Thomas said the Hoosac Mills case, in which the United States Circuit Court of Appeals at Boston held the AAA unconstitutional and the processing taxes invalid, would be taken to the Supreme Court as soon as possible.

This case, Thomas said, probably will determine the validity of both the original act and the amendments.

Writ on AAA Refused.

"To declare the old act unconstitutional without considering the amendments," Thomas said, "would be simply futile. I think the Supreme Court will take judicial notice of the amendments."

At about the same time word was received of a ruling by the Ninth Circuit Court in San Francisco denying an injunction to stop AAA from collecting processing taxes. Justice Department officials called it a balance for the unfavorable decision of the First Circuit Court in Boston which earlier had declared the AAA unconstitutional in the Hoosac Mills case.

Concerning the processing tax suits, Thomas said that "it is my opinion that, on motion in those cases where suits have been filed but injunctions have not been granted, the suits will be dismissed."

Thomas said he believed the peak in suits had been reached and that there would be no additions to the list pending a Supreme Court decision. He added that the amendments provided a method for processors to recover taxes and he believed that this would remove ground for temporary injunctions.

"Will Not Change Goal."

Farm officials yesterday turned attention to plans for changes to be brought about by the new law, indicating that there would be little change in the major crop adjustment programs.

The AAA reported 60 licenses, including 35 milk licenses, in effect, which, it was said, will be changed to "orders" under the amendments.

Secretary Wallace said in an interview that the Farm Administration "has not and will not change its goal."

"The concept from the beginning," Wallace said, "has been to produce a normal supply per capita for the American consumer and not to produce a surplus for a foreign market which has been lost."

Wallace said the AAA had not turned "about face" in changing plans for wheat acreage reduction next year. The reduction was changed from 15 to 5 per cent because of crop losses through black rust and heat.

Cash Cotton Advance

By the Associated Press.

New Orleans, Aug. 16 (AP).—A 10-cent a pound cash advance to cotton farmers on this year's crop was authorized today by the American Cotton Co-operative Association.

The announcement followed a two-day meeting of directors of the association in New Orleans and climaxed a day of loan predictions and denials from Washington which had the market gyrating back and forth.

The action was taken by the co-operatives to aid farmers in holding their cotton until the Government makes its future loan policy public.

By the Associated Press.

High Farm Administration officials yesterday said a final decision on a loan on the 1935 cotton crop had not been reached. They were reported in opposition to an announcement at this time.

Despite statements from Capitol Hill that a 12-cent loan would be announced by tonight, some officials said privately that an announcement would not be made before Monday, "if then."

Pope to Bless, Roosevelt To Greet Catholic Rally

Cleveland, Aug. 16 (AP).—The Rt. Rev. Bishop Joseph Schrembs, of the Cleveland Catholic diocese, announced today that Pope Pius would broadcast the papal blessing to those in attendance at the seventh National Eucharistic Congress here September 23 to 26 and that President Roosevelt would send a message of greeting.

Bishop Schrembs released copies of a letter he received from President Roosevelt wishing the congress success and expressing the wish that he could attend personally.

The papal blessing, Bishop Schrembs said, would be broadcast by Pope Pius as the congress prepares to close its final session.

Publisher in Panama Is Returned to Jail

Panama City, Aug. 16 (U.P.).—Nelson Rounsevell, publisher of the Panama American, who was at liberty under bond on charges of criminal libel, was jailed again in Balboa today when he withdrew $2,500 he had posted as bail following his arrest August 2.

Rounsevell said the money belonged to the Panama American Publishing Co. After the bail had been returned, he surrendered to the authorities and was locked up. The court agreed to accept the personal surety of ten Canal Zone employes to free Rounsevell, but the publisher refused in order not to jeopardize their positions.

Award Voted for Son Of Prohibition Victim

By the United Press.

Four years ago Federal prohibition agents raided the home of Mike Vasilzevic in Milwaukee, Wis., found some wine and poured it on the dirt floor of the basement. Mrs. Vasilzevic stepped in the puddle, turned on an electric light switch, and was killed.

Yesterday the Senate voted to pay her son, Nick, 6, $5,000.

HopkinsRuling Gives Unions Works Victory

Lifts Requirement That Labor Be Taken From Relief Rolls.

By the Associated Press.

Harry L. Hopkins yesterday gave permission for employment of union labor exclusively, whether on relief rolls or not, on all work relief projects carried out under contract.

The order, applying to both skilled and unskilled labor, in effect returned all heavy construction—including slum clearance, non-Federal PWA, and rivers and harbors projects—to their status under the old PWA program.

It provided that contractors who so desired might recruit both skilled and unskilled labor from union rolls instead of from the United States Employment Service. Preference, however, must be given union members on relief, and the contractor may go to the employment service for labor if sufficient men are not provided within 48 hours after he presents his request to the union.

Supported by Ickes.

The new policy was supported by Secretary Ickes, who had contended that there were not sufficient skilled construction workmen on relief to carry out heavy projects. It was as well, a concession to the building trade unions.

Meanwhile the Federal Government began scrapping its most unusual experiment in relief, overnight shelters and rural camps for those who took to the open road in search of jobs or adventure.

Those able to work will get jobs in the Civilian Conservation Corps or some other work relief agency. The remaining 10 per cent who are unable to work will be sent home, to be cared for by the State or community like other "unemployables."

Denies Program Failed.

In announcing the new policy Hopkins was quick to deny that his transient program had been a failure. It had not interfered with the supply of harvest labor, he contended, and it was "the first time in America that anybody undertook to do anything about those people wandering around looking for jobs."

The Civilian Conservation Corps will absorb those who are between 18 and 28, or have war records and the Works Progress Administration is expected to provide for most of the others.

About 75,000 transients are now being cared for compared with the miximum of 200,000 some time ago.

Wagner Receives Fraternity Honor

Phi Sigma Kappa Names Him for Public Service.

Senator Robert F. Wagner, of New York, yesterday was selected by Lambda Chapter of Phi Sigma Kappa Fraternity, at George Washington University, as the "Phi Sig" who during the past year has accomplished the "most for the American people."

Selection of Senator Wagner was based principally on the Wagner labor bill and his sponsorship and active work on the social service bill, signed by President Roosevelt early this week.

Senator Wagner, who received his bachelor of science degree from the College of the City of New York in 1896, was initiated into Zeta Chapter of Phi Sigma Kappa during his undergraduate days.

Anti-Chain Group Files $300,000 Damage Suit

The National Anti-Chain Store League yesterday filed a $300,000 damage suit in the District Supreme Court against the Food & Grocery Chain Stores of America, Inc. The damage suit climaxes a quarrel of long standing between the two organizations.

The anti-chain store group in filing its complaint stated it was engaged in organizing independent merchants for their mutual benefit and that the Food & Grocery Chain Stores of America, Inc., along with 14 individuals, had pursued an "unlawful combination, conspiracy and agreement" against the anti-chain organization. The complaint, filed by former Senator C. C. Dill and J. W. Gum, further alleged that the Food & Grocery Chain Stores of America, Inc., had paid an employe of the plaintiff $50 a week for furnishing confidential information concerning the activities of the anti-chain group.

President Grants West $11,000,000 for Works

By the Associated Press.

Irrigation and reclamation projects in six Western States were approved yesterday by President Roosevelt. He allotted $11,000,000 from the work relief fund for them.

Topping the list was $4,500,000 to the Reclamation Bureau for one year's work on the Salt River Valley project in Arizona. It is estimated $6,844,000 is needed for its completion.

Bender Calls on Court to Force Ohio Election

Special Poll on Successor to Truax Is Object of Mandamus Action.

By the Associated Press.

Richmond, Va., Aug. 16.—George H. Bender, president of the Ohio Federation of Republican Clubs, asserted tonight that he was proceeding with court action in an effort to force the early calling of a special election to name a successor to the late Representative Charles V. Truax (Democrat), Ohio.

He said he had been advised a hearing on his mandamus action had been set by the Ohio Supreme Court for August 24.

The announcement of Gov. Martin L. Davey, of Ohio, that the Truax election would be held in November, 1936, coincident with the general election, was greeted by Bender with the assertion, "We will not brook violation of the clear intent of the law through subterfuge such as eliminating a special election by ordering it to take place at next year's election."

He said Davey was trying to avoid a "referendum on the New Deal."

Davey Orders Call

By the Associated Press.

New York, Aug. 16.—In another move in the Ohio political controversy involving the election of a successor to Representative Charles B. Truax, Governor Martin L. Davey today announced he had advised his Columbus office to call an election coincident with next year's May primary and November general election.

Ohio Republicans, incensed because Governor Davey has refused to call a special election this year to fill Truax' seat on the ground it would cost too much money, have charged him with fear that the election might prove too great a test for the "New Deal" in that State.

Fletcher Critical

Henry P. Fletcher, chairman of the Republican National Committee, yesterday sharply assailed President Roosevelt and Gov. Martin L. Davey, of Ohio, for the failure to call a special election in that State to elect a successor to the late Representative at Large Charles V. Truax.

"We had hoped," Fletcher asserted, "that the Democrats would accept our challenge to submit the New Deal to a popular test in Ohio, but President Roosevelt and Gov. Davey have apparently conspired to deprive the people of the whole State of Ohio of their legal right to elect a Representative to sit in the second session of this Congress, and to express in a State-wide election their verdict on the New Deal.

"Gov. Davey's excuse for postponing the election until next year is that it would cost several hundred thousand dollars. But he has secured a promise from the President of some $20,000,000 from the United States Treasury, to be spent by him in Ohio. Maybe it was not a conspiracy, just a squeeze play, but it cost Ohio one Congressman at large, and the taxpayers of the Nation $20,000,000.

"It is not an inspiring spectacle when the Chief Executive of the Nation and the Governor of a great State, both elected as Democrats, are afraid to trust the people. The President said he did not know there was an election in Rhode Island; he wants to be sure there will not be one in Ohio."

3-Day Parley Fails To Settle Strike

Arbitration Conferences Deadlocked at Camden.

By the Associated Press.

Efforts to find a basis for arbitrating the Camden (N. J.) shipyard strike remained deadlocked last night and joint company-union-Government conferences seeking that end were suspended until Monday morning.

At the end of a three-day meeting it was learned the conferees were striving to determine mutually agreeable items to be submitted to a three-man board to be appointed by the President for arbitration.

Charles E. Wyzanski, solicitor for the Labor Department, said that when an arbitration plan is agreed to by all parties it will be transcribed in letter form and the single form sent to both company and union for signature.

This, he said, could be taken as recognition of the union. John Green, executive secretary of the union, when told of this opinion, did not disagree with it.

Hamburg, Germany, Aug. 16 (AP). A ceremonial welcome was accorded Paul Kress, the German whose application for a masseur's license in New York was denied by Mayor LaGuardia, when he arrived today from America.

Officials of Hamburg labor front groups and a brass band participated in the greeting. At Cuxhaven, where Kress disembarked from a transatlantic boat, the mayor delivered a speech in which he said Kress would "get in Germany what he couldn't get in the United States—a living."

Expert Facials, Coiffures Done At New Parlor

By Dudley Harmon.

Substituting for Ruth Anne Davis.

A NEW beauty shop, which we think you will be interested in visiting, has opened on Connecticut avenue. The proprietor and most of the operators are French, which means that they are the last word when it comes to skill and originality.

The proprietor has recently returned from a trip to France, and he is full of interesting ideas on new coiffures. Hair styles, it sems, are going to change radically this season, and he knows just which way the wind will blow. Let him make over that coiffure of which you have grown a bit weary.

His facials are extra good, too. He uses a special scientific pack, which has been compounded by chemists after much experimentation with ingredients good for the skin. This pack has a purity which few others possess, and will tone up your skin no end.

The shop itself is one of the coolest and most attractive in Washington. The furnishings, of course, are all absolutely new, and very attractive besides. In each booth is a telephone, so you can tell your friends to call you at the shop.

San Tan Kits Reduced.

IT SEEMS a little silly to talk about sun tan lotions this late in the season. However, at the risk of appearing hopelessly behind the times, we can't resist telling late vacationers about a marvelous sun tan kit which is on sale at a reduced price at a downtown store. The original price was $1.50; now it has been cut to 50 cents. It contains three essential items for beachgoers. First, there's a jar of talcum powder, to rub on after the swim. Then, there's a perfectly grand sun oil, absolutely guaranteed to keep from burning and blistering. Applied generously to legs, arms, face and back it will act as a protection against burn and at the same time assure all the beneficial effects of the sun. You'll emerge a rich, golden brown after several applications, instead of a raw and beefy red. Last, but not least, are some tissues for applying the oil. These tissues come rolled up in handy little wads, and can be carried around in the purse after the other contents of the kit are exhausted. They are ideal for quick cleansing purposes on any occasion.

Bargains in Soap, Powder.

A LOCAL department store has an exceptional value this week in the soap and powder line. For $1 you can get a box containing six cakes of soap, a carton of dusting powder and a can of talcum. This package is a grand affair for the whole family. The dusting powder will be pounced on by the wife, the talcum by her husband, and they will both fight over the soap.

The last comes in different colors and is lightly scented with gardenia, carnation and violet perfume. It is of the very finest quality and is so shaped to fit the palm of the hand that you can use it down to the very last inch.

'Tom' Always Studious, 'Eliza Gant' Tells Press

Mountain Resident Brings Out Old Pictures and Describes Early Youth of Author of "Look Homeward, Angel," and "Of Time and the River."

By Elizabeth Perrow Putnam.

ON A SIDE STREET in a little mountain city in North Carolina, Julia Wolfe, whose son, Thomas, has immortalized her as the Eliza Gant of his books, "Look Homeward, Angel," and "Of Time and the River," still presides over the boarding house she has run for the last 30 years.

The street is shabby and nondescript. Two or three automobile agencies are clustered at one end of it as if seeking companionship; a vacant lot flaunts many-colored weeds; and an old gabled brick house wears a sign, "Funeral Home," with a self-conscious, apologetic air.

But the Wolfe house has recently been painted a somewhat startling shade of yellow, and there is a bright new sign on the lawn, which says, "Tourists." Another faded sign over the door is more explicit; in rain-battered letters it proclaims the house to be "The Old Kentucky Home."

One the side porch of this house I found Julia Wolfe at work. She rose, still holding one of the rag rugs she was mending in one hand, and simply, without embarrassment, held out the other.

In the clasp of that work-hardened hand there is firmness and strength; in her direct brown eyes shrewdness and kindness are mingled; in her quirky mouth there is a sly humor. But all these things are unimportant. The notable quality about Julia Wolfe is her vast simplicity, her unshakable serenity.

The descendant of many generations of mountain people, she seems to have absorbed some of the everlasting quality of the blue hills that surround her; and one feels that she, like them, can endure devastating storms, and scorching suns; that fierceness and gentleness, adversity and good fortune alike leave her essentially unchanged.

Tells About "Tom."

"I suppose you want to know about Tom," she said, having resumed her rug mending. "Every day some one comes here asking about him. You know he has just come back from Europe. He left before his last book came out, said he just couldn't bear to be here. He wrote me that for a week before the book was published he walked the streets of Paris all night. He hardly slept at all until he learned the book was a success. But Tom always was that way, he takes every thing so hard. I tell him he ought not to stay by himself so much and brood. He would be a lot better off if he got out more and mixed with people."

"No," she said, pursing her lips meditatively as she threaded a needle. "We never thought about there being anything unusual about Tom. Of course, he was the baby, and we all spoiled him. Though Effie, that's my oldest daughter, cried when he was born. She was so disappointed because he wasn't a girl.

"His father, Mr. Wolfe, was crazy about him, used to take him up to his shop with him, and almost every day he would buy Tom a book. Come to think of it, Tom did learn to read when he was two years old, and that was sooner than any of the other children.

"And he begged so to go to school that I let him start when he was four. I thought he would get tired and stop, but he didn't. He kept right on; he used to be at the head of his class and he used to win all the prizes, especially in public speaking. Mr. Wolfe always thought Tom would be a lawyer."

In the winter, Mrs. Wolfe recalled, she and Tom would go to Florida. "He used to change schools twice a year," she said, "but he never lost any ground, and one winter I taught him at home."

"'Tom,' I said to him, 'I don't see any use in your buying all those books when I can teach you right here at home.' I don't think much of the way they teach school nowadays anyway. I taught in the country when I was young, and the children learned a lot faster and more thoroughly than they do in the city now.

School at Home.

"So we had school at home. Tom was easy to teach, he used to get so excited about things in books, and he never forgot anything. He was always wanting me to tell him stories about people, and he always remembered every little detail. He puts those things in his books, but you know sometimes I think Tom exaggerates a little when he writes."

When one of the tourists remarked that Tom was considered a great genius, Mrs. Wolfe replied that "yes, it did look that way." She said it with her characteristic simplicity, proudly, but not boastfully; as another mother might have agreed when someone said her son was a good business man.

"But there is a streak of sadness in Tom," she said. "He's always writing about being lost. Sometimes I think it may be my fault, perhaps I didn't always make things as cheerful as I might have." Her brown eyes were tender, and almost tearful as she said this, then she smiled. "I was so busy," she explained.

Saddened by Death.

"Then Tom was always sad after his big brother, Ben, died. He had always been crazy about Ben; seems like Ben was the only one that could make him feel calm and peaceful. But," he broke off, "you want some pictures, don't you? Come in, and I'll show you the ones I have for you.

"This is of Tom when he was 5. Mr. Wolfe had it made one day without telling me. I told him he should have waited until Tom was dressed better. He looks awful in that old brown flannel suit. I made it for him to play in. This is a picture of the house with Tom sitting on the front steps. He was just 4 then. And this one of me. A young girl? Mercy, no, I had had all those children when that was taken. Wait, I'll get you a paper to put them in."

She left me standing in an old-fashioned "parlor." Lace curtains hung at the windows, a red carpet decorated the floor, the walls were decorated with innumerable photographs, and Tom's college diplomas, one from the University of North Carolina and the other, giving him the degree of master of arts, from Harvard.

Copies of "Look Homeward Angel" and "Of Time and the River" lay on the marble-topped table, and on the fly leaf of the latest book Tom Wolfe had written in a sprawlling hand:

"For my mother—with all the love and respect I have for her, and with the hope that she will find this book worthy of what she hopes I may do and be. From her son, Tom—March, 1935."

The author of "Look Homeward Angel" and other fiction is shown above at the age of 4 wearing a suit made by his mother, the Eliza Gant of his novels.

Training Child To Fear Dogs Is Cruel Plan

By Alice Clarissa Richmond,
Associated Press Staff Writer.

"DON'T go near that dog, dear, he might bite you."

Mrs. Brown was herself afraid of dogs. Perhaps she had been bitten by one when she was small, or perhaps her mother had been bitten by one and had trained the fear into her child. Such things are not inherited but passed on by tradition from generation to generation.

It is cruel to train a little child in the fear of dogs, and that was what Mrs. Brown was doing. Fear is always hampering, and if one must avoid and shrink from every dog one meets at a time and in a world where dogs are universally owned, one must walk very circumspectly.

A dog could and should be the trusted friend of every child. As a result of the crowded conditions of city life this is today impossible. But at least children may be allowed to have a passing acquaintanceship with dogs, and so become familiar with them.

The mother who is herself afraid of dogs would do well if, instead of warning and guarding her child against unlikely dangers, she would try to overcome her own dread and so break the heritage of fear which she is transmitting to her child.

Iritis Not Local Infection; Poisons in Body Cause It

Affliction May Be Induced by Diseased Tonsils, Sinuses or Teeth, Cutter Says; Chronic Form Comes on Gradually.

By Dr. Irving S. Cutter.

IRITIS is an inflammation of the iris, which is the curtain of tissue surrounding the pupil of the eye. This particular structure gives the color to the eye, that is, the iris may be brown, blue, gray or hazel, as the case may be. Disease of this tissue usually implies inflammation of other deeper portions of the eye.

The onset of iritis is characterized by an intense reddening of the eye and is accompanied by considerable pain. The vision may not be decreased at first, but later the fluid in the eye becomes cloudy and the pupil is closed by a thin membrane which interferes considerably with sight. In its early stages the inflammation may be mistaken for acute conjunctivitis (pinkeye) or for acute glaucoma. An accurate diagnosis is of the greatest importance.

Severe or neglected cases of iritis lead to complete obstruction of the pupil and total loss of vision in the affected eye. The eye becomes soft and the pupil has a white or opaque appearance due to the formation of light obstructing bodies in the lens (which lies back of the pupil and focuses light upon the retina). In other cases the drainage of the eye is obstructed and as a result the eyeball will become very hard and intensely painful. Since both eyes are likely to become affected, iritis is responsible for a number of cases of complete blindness.

In the chronic form there may be little or no redness and practically no pain at any time. Its onset may be gradual and the diagnosis is made only when reduction of vision brings the patient to a physician.

Iritis is caused by absorption into the eye of infection that has its focus in some other part of the body. Pus in the tonsils, about the roots of the teeth, in the sinuses, or along the urinary tract are often responsible.

A great many of the complications of iritis result from the development of firm adhesions between the iris and the lens. For this reason the pupil must be kept dilated so that adhesions will not occur. The use of atropine solution dropped into the eye may be sufficient, but frequently atropine and other drugs will need to be injected about the eye before the pupil can be dilated. After this is accomplished, the dilation will need to be continued until all signs of acute inflammation have completely disappeared. Large doses of sodium salicylate are usually employed to lessen the pain. Injections of foreign protein, which bring about a rise in temperature, are often followed by marked relief of symptoms. This rise of temperature is of value not only in relieving pain, but in combating the inflammation itself.

This BUSINESS of LIVING

By Mary Haworth.

DEAR MISS HAWORTH: Your column in The Post has interested me for many months and I've intended writing to tell you how helpful, intelligent and understanding your advice always seems to be.

Today (Tuesday, August 14) when I read your last paragraph in answer to "Kitty R.," I felt I must offer you my thanks and approval. Yours is a real service.

". . . Fervent desire to achieve a worth-while goal is a form of prayer in itself and prayer literally moves figurative mountains . . ." you wrote.

• • • •

It has taken me half a lifetime to learn how true that is, for until recently I had the mistaken idea that we should not desire specific things, merely good in the abstract. My life lacked direction and I was buffeted about.

• • • •

Only this past winter did I learn how wrong I'd been, and that desire to achieve a concrete objective is the most powerful force in life. Things changed very quickly for the better when I learned to use my God-given powers of desiring constructively and affirmatively that which I needed, and praying with all the fervor of body, mind and soul for their attainment. Few people desire ardently enough. We are all very lazy, very vague in our mental standards. One could write on and on but—my thanks and appreciation for the best column I've ever read. Very sincerely yours,

MARY MILLER.

Creation Begins in Mind.

DEAR MARY MILLER: Thank you for this most kind and constructive contribution to the column. I hope that "Kitty R." may read your letter and be completely convinced that I was not idly philosophizing in declaring my belief in the positive benefit of active prayer.

• • • •

Every material thing which exists to contribute to humanity's comfort today was conceived as an idea in someone's mind before it was born into form and substance. And if one has need to improve one's state in life, one first must vizualize what new and better form one's life should take. In the case of "Kitty R.," she thinks if she had a job, and could dress better, and could be more cheerful, perhaps her home life might be happier. She has a bit of business training, her children are half grown, she is free to find a job if she will.

• • • •

But she is held back by negative thinking, and further handicapped by the fact that her husband heaps his negation upon her own. He tells her she isn't attractive enough to qualify for a position in the business world.

• • • •

"Kitty R." should tell herself, with quiet firmness: "What I need is a job. With a job, I will dress better and be more cheerful. Then things will be better." Knowing what she wants, and why she wants it, she can proceed with the same directness toward obtaining it. Up to now, she has been vaguely speculating. In future, I hope she will think and act straight (and strongly) to the point.

I think your letter may help her to do this. So, thank you again for writing it. M. H.

Decorative Ceilings Coming Back in Vogue

As history repeats itself, so do decorative trends. While the public taste is not swinging to ceilings decorated with floral garlands and cupids, the appreciation of decorative ceilings is again asserting itself. Stenciled borders in soft colors are being used as a means of lending importance to ceilings.

If the ceiling is unusually low, the border is stenciled on the ceiling itself, instead of on the wall. In small rooms the stenciled design may be applied only at the corners.

Chipped Beef With Noodles Proves Tasty

By Dorothea Duncan.

WITH A LITTLE ingenuity one good recipe can be the basis for several tasty dishes. Take a dish as plain as creamed dried beef, for example. It has always been a popular breakfast dish, and if a dish is a favorite for one meal there is no reason why it shouldn't have possibilities for another meal, whether it be breakfast, dinner or luncheon.

Creamed dried beef sounds prosaic enough, but listen to these suggested variations for luncheon or dinner menus: Add mushrooms to the creamed dried beef sauce and serve it for dinner in a nest of fried noodles such as are served under chop suey or chow mein. Or add cooked green peas to the creamed mixture and serve it for luncheon in pattie shells or toast cases.

Make your favorite noodle ring, unmold it and fill it with creamed dried beef, further enhanced with a bit of chopped green pepper or parsley. Creamed dried beef atop a mound of cooked macaroni or poured over halves of mealy baked potatoes makes a particularly delicious supper dish for children. Add a shredded vegetable salad and a fruit pudding or stewed fruit and a glass of milk to make the menu complete.

Creamed drief beef served in popover shells or over hot biscuits shortcake fashion are interesting enough dishes for the grownups' dinner.

Here is a creamed drief beef and rice toast combination that should be tried when the first cool evening makes its appearance. Pack plain boiled rice into a loaf pan like mush to chill and stiffen. Turn it out and slice, fry in butter and serve under the creamed beef. Here is the recipe.

Creamed Dried Beef on Toasted Rice.

2 cups top milk
¼ cup flour
¼ cup butter
Pepper
1 cup rice

Cook rice in top of double boiler in 4 cups of salted water for 1 hour. Remove to loaf pan and pack firmly. Chill in refrigerator, then slice and fry in butter.

Make a rich sauce by melting butter, adding flour, then milk and stirring until thickened. Add the beef broken into pieces. Season with pepper and serve over toasted rice.

Creamed Beef in Noodle Ring.

2 cups noodles
3 eggs
½ cup milk
1 teaspoon salt

Creamed Beef.

¼ cup butter
¼ cup flour
2 cups milk
1 can mushrooms
¼ pound dried beef
½ green pepper

Boil noodles for 15 minutes, drain well and mix with eggs and milk and seasoning. Place in a buttered ring mold and bake in a 325-350 degrees Fahrenheit oven for 45 minutes or until set. Set mold in pan of hot water during baking. Unmold and fill center with creamed dried beef.

Make a white sauce of the butter, flour and milk. Season with pepper, add chopped green pepper, mushrooms and beef which has been frizzled lightly in a little hot melted butter. Garnish with parsley.

Paris (U.P.).—Navy blue or black with a frilly touch of white pique is still considered by smart Parisians to be in best taste for daytime town wear. Pastel or even bright shades are popular for the races, for polo or for country wear, but black and white or navy blue and white remain the choice of chic Parisiennes for town.

Her Eyes, They Tame 'Ze Wild Animals'

Any Woman Can Do So With Men, Sniffs Mlle. Rasputin.

By Mal Steuart.

"ANY WOMAN can tame a man with ze eyes. But with my eyes, I tame ze wild animal." Mlle. Marie Rasputin, blonde, and witching blue-eyed daughter of the Russian monk, who sways bears and lions as her father swayed Czars and Czarinas, revealed the secret of her power as she sat under her dressing tent knitting a red sweater yesterday at the circus grounds.

"All eyes, the have charm," she continued, gesticulating with very pink and pointed fingertips. "A woman can charm a man, if she says 'I want heem.' But it is the magnetism—what you call? That is the treeck I have for my act."

She smiled and a faraway gleam flashed in her nervous, wide-set blue eyes. She faced none of her company but peered beyond them out over the circus grounds. "I can not explain you this treek. It is from inside me. It is a breath, a heart beat."

A young man in the group of friends around the wild animal trainer boasted of the time she had gone out into the deep forests of Peru last winter, to return to the Ringling Bros. Circus camp with a full grown lion walking peacefully at her side.

"It is the lion I use in my lion riding act," interposed the Mlle. Rasputin. "He is a good one. But he did not like the panther, and when they had a fight I got this and this and this." And she indicated dark scars on her arms and on her short-trousered well-shaped legs. "I use the lion now alone. My bears I have left behind. It is more hard making the animals happy with each other, than happy with me."

MLLE. MARIE RASPUTIN, daughter of the famous monk, uses her magnetic eyes to tame beasts.

Society Dull, Daughter of "Mad Monk's Entered Circus.

An older woman in the group, reclining in a beach chair, waving a fan, said the Mlle. Rasputin had been an animal trainer for only three years. "She is marveilleiux, so soon!" she exclaimed.

"I wanted to do something dangerous," exclaimed the madamoiselle. "For so long in Paris society, it was too tame. And I was mad, too. My father and mother in prison still. I would show the world!" Her eyes lit with a satyric gleam.

Ringling Bros. discovered her genius and engaged her in London soon after she had decided upon her career. "No more society for me," she said. "I like this." She gazed around the backyard of the circus—ropes, trucks, sawdust and the trailer boys sleeping through it all. Then she stared in front of her.

"Tell the world," she said, "that my father was a good man, an intelligent man. He had magnetism, but he ruled men because he was wise. Me, I rule animals, because I have—what you call 'em?—ze treeks."

Then one of the tent ropes gave way and a tent pole fell down on the head of the older woman, reclining in the beach chair. "Ooh, la-la-la-la!"

The group around the tent stood up. Mlle. Rasputin, in a twinkling, was bathing the unfortunate brow with a towel and cold water. Beyond the band was blaring. The circus was going on.

Novel Type of Veils to Feature Paris and Hollywood Fall Styles

ANY WOMAN can be a coquette this fall if she wants to. Any woman can achieve the illusion of mystery or a romantic past. Any woman can look soft and feminine, or intriguing and seductive, or cute and tricky. For that infallible first aid to feminine charm—the veil—is definitely in.

Both Paris and Hollywood report veils omnipresent in the fall fashion picture. Screen stars are using them to fit every mood from the quaint to the sirenish. Paris designers are using them in both old and new fashioned ways.

Veils this fall will be worn with every type of costume except the out-and-out sports attire. Sailor hats for street wear may be draped severely with stiff mesh veils that tie in the back, or they may be drawn down tight over the face in the old-fashioned manner and tied around the neck with black velvet bands.

Larger hats for the cocktail hour can be adorned with picturesque cascades of lace. These may even ripple down over the shoulders in the back. For evening the thinnest of veiling may be used to drape the hair and eyes in Oriental effect and to add mystery and glamour to one's personality.

If you are a Spanish type be sure to accent your eyes with lacy black veils. Stiff mesh veils of horsehair will provide haloes for the blonde type. These may serve as brims for afternoon hats made in skull-cap effect.

Paris designers are turning their creative fancy to producing many novel veil effects. Mado veils the entire face snugly down to the chin, then gathers the rest of the veil high on the top of the hat in a series of bows and loops. Jean Patou uses veils as hat trimmings. On a rather flat little brimmed felt he slips the veil under the ribbon band, veiling the front half of the brim and lets netting dip over the eyes. He then brings the rest to the back of the hat, piling it in two great bows to add height to the pancake hat.

Killer Sullen After Capture By Va. Police

Escaped Henrico County Prisoner Refuses to Discuss Break.

By the Associated Press.

Richmond, Va., Aug. 16.—Captured at dawn by a squad of police who had been given their clew by a suspicious farmer, Harry L. Sprouse, convicted killer, who escaped from Henrico County Jail August 6, this afternoon sullenly refused to answer questions of officers who sought to learn how he obtained hacksaws used in the break and a rifle found beside him as he slept at daybreak.

The capture took place at an abandoned hut in a swamp near James Crossroads in Hanover County. Chief Fred L. Bates and his aids, after a moonlight march on the cabin, seized the fugitive asleep on the floor. He was captured without a struggle and taken back to the jail he left ten days before by sawing bars from his cell door and a corridor window.

Sam Pate, a farmer, found a bed of tree branches in a pasture. Nearby were ears of partly eaten green corn. He notified Brackett Vaughn, Hanover officer, who called on Henrico authorities to lead the search.

The case of James Johnson, Negro trusty, accused of smuggling the saws to Sprouse, was continued when called in Police Court today. Officers said they wanted to get more information from the recaptured prisoner.

Commonwealth's Attorney Harold M. Ratcliffe said the escape would add one year to the 20-year sentence Sprouse received for the death of Otho Hicks, stabbed fatally in a brawl in a Goochland County roadhouse. Sprouse is yet to face trial for the alleged murder of E. L. Hicks, brother of Otho, in the same fight.

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Frederick, Md., Aug. 16.—Declaring that he was an "accommodating nominee" for the registration of a certificate for 500 shares of the defunct Central Trust Co. issued four months before the bank closed, Charles McC. Mathias, one of the vice presidents, filed an answer in the circuit court yesterday to a suit filed by the receiver, John J. Ghingher, to enforce payment of stockholders' statutory liability.

Mathias stated that the 500 shares were issued in the name of "Charles McCurdy Mathias" in order to keep them separate from his individual holdings of stock. In a separate suit he is made defendant for statutory liability on his holdings of 1,154 shares. Mathias contends that the actual owner of the 500 shares is Richard P. Ross, manager of a syndicate formed April 11, 1931. Ross held syndicate liabilities in excess of $1,000,000 and was adjudged bankrupt after the bank closed in September, 1931.

Ice Mountain Lures Virginians From Heat

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Winchester, Va., Aug. 16.—With the thermometer hovering near the 100-degree level day after day, many persons are seeking relief by holding picnics on Ice Mountain, near Capon Bridge, W. Va.

Over a large area on the mountain ice is found the year around. Bottles of beverages buried in the earth become ice cold in a short time and melons often are cooled by placing them on stones on the mountain side.

Ice Mountain is near Caudy Castle, a lofty peak where, according to tradition, a pioneer once hid himself in a niche at the turn of a narrow shelf, along which lay the only trail in that section, and one by one, hurled into the Cacapon River, 500 feet below, an entire tribe of Indians as they rounded the curve.

B. & O. Counsel Seek to Place Blame in Crash

Railroad Attorneys Confer With County Lawyer on Bus Crash Suits.

By the Associated Press.

Rockville, Md., Aug. 16.—Alleged failure of the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad to provide adequate safeguards at the grade crossing here continued a moot question today, in the wake of a conference between the county commissioners' attorney and counsel for the road.

Edward Peter, representing the county board, met with John S. Stanley and William F. Prettyman, legal representatives of the B. & O., in an hour's session.

Although none of the conferees would make formal statements, it was understood no decision was reached as regards the 15 suits which Peter has filed against the railroad as an outgrowth of the accident last April 11 in which 14 school children were killed.

He based the suits on a 23-year-old statute which requires the road to keep a watchman on duty at the crossing from 6 a. m. to midnight. Residents contend the railroad has never fully complied with the law.

The bus in which the school children, all from Williamsport, were riding, was struck by a fast passenger train shortly after 11 p. m. No watchman was on duty at the time, it was testified later.

Under the old statute, the road is liable to a fine of $50 a day for each day the law is not observed. Peter's 15 suits set forth specific dates on which the railroad is alleged to have violated the law.

France Links New Dealers And Hoover

'Federal Socialism' Is Assailed at Rally to Boom Nice.

Present Day 'Plagues' Seen Originating With Wilson.

By the Associated Press.

Tolchester, Md., Aug. 16.—President Roosevelt and former President Hoover, bitter rivals in the last national campaign, were linked today by former Senator Joseph I. France, of Port Deposit, in an assault upon what he called "Federal socialism."

France told an audience at a picnic sponsored at this beach resort by the Young Republican League of Maryland that the late President Wilson will be "remembered as the founder of that Federal socialism which plagues us today."

"Wilson was a great mind, a great schoolmaster," said the former Republican Senator. "Since his lamented death, we have had two of his disciples—Hoover, his food dictator, and Roosevelt, his Assistant Naval Secretary—as President, both failures sitting in the seat upon which Washington, Jeffereson and Lincoln shed glory.

"They (Hoover and Roosevelt) did not heed the words of Wilson but perpetuated his works. Some justify the Federal socialism of Wilson as a measure of war. There can be no defense of Hooverism which is not Republicanism, or New Dealism, which is not Democracy."

New Deal Assailed.

In a denunciation of the New Deal France said it "is not new. It is just another member of the Old Deal family, Grandfather's first name, Raw, which was so prominent in Washington society during the war."

He asserted it had changed government "by the people," described by Lincoln. "They have cut out that 'the,'" he said, "and now we have government of people, by people, for people, which means of officials, by officials, for officials."

He asserted a return to the "true principles" of his party would banish the depression and usher in recovery, and urged that a man with a "Republican soul" be made President. Apparently referring to his charge that Hoover does not represent the party, and taking an indirect shot at the former President, he said:

"Before I recommend any so-called Republican for nomination, I shall examine his head and feel his ribs. I want no more lamb chops for the loin of a wolf masquerading as a lamb."

Long Enemies.

France's political enmity with Hoover is not new. The Marylander was bodily ejected from the 1932 convention which renominated Hoover. He said that he was at the time trying to nominate former President Coolidge.

One of the objectives of today's outing at which he spoke was to launch a presidential boom for Gov. Harry W. Nice of Maryland. Printed programs for the picnic proclaimed, "For President of the United States, Hon. Harry W. Nice, Governor of Maryland."

The Young Republican League claimed the distinction of being the "first political organization in the United States to indorse the candidate of Governor for the Presidency."

Virginia Crowd Joins Revelry At Annual Folk Music Festival

By the Associated Press.

Marion, Va., Aug. 16.—White Top Mountain, in southwestern Virginia, tonight was the scene of festivities around glowing campfires as old tunes, dances and folk songs, ballads and hymns were rendered spontaneously by crowds joining in the revelry that marked the close of the first day of the annual folk music festival.

A dance in the festival pavilion, advertised to continue until 8 a. m., began at 6 p. m. with 30 bands competing for a chance to play for the mountain folk.

More than 100 artists, composers, symphony orchestra conductors, folklore collectors and writers pronounced the first day's program the finest ever held in the South.

Recorders for the Library of Congress were busy all day making records of new ballads, fiddle tunes and folk songs discovered among the day's offerings. Festival officials were enthusiastic over the "finds" in new tunes and new or rare versions of old tunes that came to light in the day's music.

More than 300 folk musicians from many States had registered tonight for the finals of the contests tomorrow. Eliminations will continue through the morning, with the finals scheduled for the afternoon.

'Appreciates' Rumor

Underwood & Underwood.

REP. CLIFTON A. WOODRUM.

Woodrum Glad He's Suggested For Farley Job

But Congressman Knows Nothing of Rumor on Changes in Cabinet.

By the Associated Press.

Representative Clifton A. Woodrum (Democrat), of Roanoke, said yesterday he "appreciated the suggestion" in an unconfirmed rumor that Postmaster General Farley and Secretary of the Navy Swanson were to resign shortly and that Woodrum would be appointed Postmaster General.

The rumor had it that Farley and Secretary Swanson were to resign to leave themselves unencumbered with Cabinet duties and devote their time to the 1936 presidential campaign, and that Woodrum, a vigorous advocate of the New Deal, would receive the appointment to the vacancy left by Farley.

"I appreciate the suggestion," Woodrum said when asked about it. "I had not heard the rumor and so far as I know now I shall be a candidate for re-election to the House of Representatives next year."

His answer to the question of whether he would accept the position if it were offered him was that "very few people turn down appointments to Cabinet positions."

The report did not name a possible successor to Secretary Swanson, who formerly was Governor of Virginia and a member of the United States Senate from the Old Dominion for many years.

Swanson has been active in many Democratic presidential campaigns.

Youth Disappears From Annapolis

Recent Death of Mother Is Believed Cause.

By the Associated Press.

Annapolis, Md., Aug. 16.—The recent death of the mother of a new midshipman at the Naval Academy today was thought to be a factor in the disappearance of the youth from the institution Tuesday or Wednesday.

Midshipman John C. Brunner, 19, of Wamego, Kans., whose mother died in June shortly before he entered the Academy, was missed when the regular muster was held Wednesday morning.

Brunner, a member of the freshman or plebe class now being formed at the Academy, was sworn in July 31. He participated in the regular training program.

Lieut. Comdr. Theodore T. Patterson, U. S. N., aid to the superintendent, said that Brunner's sister and guardian, Miss Lily Brunner, of Wamego, had informed Academy officials she had received a letter from her brother stating he intended leaving the Academy and that she would hear from him.

Bank's Claim On Distillery Assets Is Hit

Five Baltimoreans Enter New Receivership Suit in Maryland.

Say Misrepresentation Placed Institution as 'First Creditor.'

By the Associated Press.

Bel Air, Md., Aug. 16.—A receivership petition filed against the Hartford Pure Rye Distillery, of Havre de Grace, by a Baltimore bank as an outgrowth of an alleged $226,000 embezzlement conspiracy was countered today by an intervening petition entered by five Baltimoreans.

The new complaint, entered in Circuit Court, also asks appointment of a receiver, but asserts the National Central Bank, of Baltimore, is not first creditor of the concern, and that, therefore, no person from the institution should be appointed.

"Misrepresentation and misstatement of values" in the sale of stock in the Havre de Grace concern is alleged in the petition, filed by counsel on behalf of William F. Mylander, Dora Mylander, Anna Faust, Kate E. Mylander and Florence Mylander, all of Baltimore.

Through counsel, the plaintiffs charge promoters and directors of the distillery with inducing the plaintiffs to purchase stock in the sum of $4,000, through "misrepresentation and concealment of material matters."

The National Central Bank's receivership petition resulted after bank officials disclosed the embezzlement conspiracy in which four men, including the former cashier and vice president of the institution and the president of the distillery, are under bond for further hearing before Federal authorities.

The plaintiffs allege "a very large block of its (the distillery's) stock was issued to the Brown Securities Corporation, owned by the defendant distillery and controlled by the same individuals promoting the distillery."

Officers and other individuals, "with one exception," are also "officers and directors of the Brown Securities Corporations," the bill contends, "which was devised by the promoters of the defendant company to execute a scheme for stock disposal."

In addition to assertions the concern "dealt with and comingled funds" with the securities company, the complaint charges the distillery was "grossly mismanaged and manipulated for the benefit and advantage of certain of the officers and promoters, and for the benefit of the Brown Securities Corporation."

The "sole purpose" of the officers and promoters of the distillery was to "unload stock upon the petitioners and others," the complaint continues.

J. H. Johnson, secretary-treasurer of the Harford Co. was issued a subpoena to appear in court Tuesday with all bonds, papers, accounts and lists of stockholders of the firm.

Fugitive, Sorry, Returns to Jail

Prisoner Escaped From Cecil County Cell.

Elkton, Md., Aug. 16.—Lambert Hines, who broke from the Cecil County Jail early Sunday, came back today. He walked in as the sheriff and his aids were eating breakfast and said he was sorry and wouldn't go again. He is serving a term for petty larceny.

Sunday morning he and Jimmy Jones, 26, who had the freedom of the jail because of the heat, sawed a lock from the rear door and went over a 30-foot wall with a rope and a hook made from electric wiring and pipe they pulled from the prison bathroom.

Jones' freedom was short lived. His trousers caught on the paling of a cemetery fence when he was just a few jumps ahead of officers Sunday night. They unhooked him and returned him to jail. Jones is serving a term for assault with intent to kill.

Virginia First to Launch Study Of State Duty Under Social Bill

Morrisett, Tax Official, in Capital for Data, Says He Learned Little.

By the Associated Press.

Richmond, Va., Aug. 16.—Virginia is one of the first States, if not the first, to institute an authoritative study of the application of the national social security bill to its people, Tax Commissioner C. H. Morrisett, who conferred with authorities in Washington Wednesday on the matter, said today.

Morrisett, named by Gov. Peery, with William R. Shands, legislative research director, and Arthur W. James, public welfare commissioner, to investigate the probable cost of Virginia's participation, said he believed the Virginia group was the first State representation to call on executive officials of the President's committee on social security for administrative details.

Not much information was available at Washington, however, Morrisett reported, as operation of the act is evidently awaiting appointment of the national administrative board of three members by the President.

The tax commissioner indicated that the analysis now being begun would be more authoritative than the estimates previously published by State officials and others, and would embrace the old-age assistance feature, coupled with additional aids to mothers, the blind and others, which would be financed by general tax funds of the State and by the Federal Government. Unemployment insurance and retirement annuities features, which are to be financed by taxes incorporated in the Federal bill, probably will not come within the scope of the committee's study, he said.

Paralysis Held On Wane; 7 New Virginia Cases

2 Reported in Maryland; Hagerstown Isolates 13 Child Suspects.

By the Associated Press.

Richmond, Va., Aug. 16.—Though today's report of only seven new cases of infantile paralysis in Virginia was termed "encouraging" by Dr. I. C. Riggin, State health commissioner, he warned that other cases are to be expected.

The dwindling number of reports this week, however, was interpreted by health authorities as meaning the disease is definitely on the wane.

Three of today's new cases were from Albemarle County, a center of the summer outbreak, and one each from Richmond City, Campbell, Isle of Wight and Amelia Counties.

Dr. E. L. McQuade, director of rural health, announced at today's meeting of the Virginia Association for the Deaf here that the Virginia School for the Deaf and Blind at Staunton would not open on schedule September 3 because of the polio situation.

The State health board, which has not advised the postponement of any school openings, was notified of the delay by the board of the Staunton institution.

Counties Ask For $110,135 In WPA Plans

Maryland Leader Sends Program to Washington for Approval.

2 'White Collar' Projects to Be Included in Relief Set-up.

By the Associated Press.

Baltimore, Aug. 16.—Eight proposed plans for Works Progress Administration projects in Maryland counties were approved by Francis H. Dryden, Maryland WPA head, and submitted to Washington today. The county projects were in addition to other applications for funds totaling approximately $5,000,000 to be spent in Baltimore. Dryden also approved and submitted two projects to employ "white collar" workers.

The total cost of the county projects will be $110,135 giving work to more than 1,152 men for one month. The applications for funds will be considered Tuesday by Washington officials, who must make the final decision on allotting the money.

County Program.

The county projects approved are:

Glen Burnie—Sidewalk construction, $1,132.

White Collar Projects.

The two white collar projects are intended to provide work for clerks and technical workers who will not find a place on the construction jobs.

One of these proposals will provide assistance for the two Federal planning experts who are making a study of the region between Washington and Baltimore to develop a model regional plan. The amount to be sent on this project is $12,312.

The other white collar project calls for $18,039 to make a study of conditions in the Baltimore wholesale market during 1934.

The Baltimore projects, part of the city's $32,000,000 program, call for $4,952,000 to be spent at once. This, it is estimated, will employ 8,527 persons.

After All, Robert Donat and Madeleine Carroll Should Not Pay Supreme Penalty

Their Picture Merely Is Not Up to Measure

By Nelson B. Bell.

One suspects from a cursory survey of the daily press in the National Capital that "The 39 Steps," in which Robert Donat and Madeleine Carroll are co-starred on the screen at RKO-Keith's, may not have done too well by its stars in the matter of convincing vehicle.

This I fear to be the truth. The 39 Steps" leaves something to be desired in the matters of logic, continuity, believability and the like. It also engenders something in the way of multiplication of the curiosity that centered in Mr. Donat following his rather brilliantly successful assumption of the title role in "The Count of Monte Cristo," almost a full year ago.

So here, thanks to the patient research of Manager Hardie Meakin of Keith's, you have what he is pleased to term a "tintype" of Mr. Donat—executed in the usual fashion of:

Dots and Dashes.

Robert, then, is known as the man who put the MAN in roMANce . . . Quaint, don't you think? . . . Or do you? . . . This applies to real as well as reel life . . . Mrs. Donat agrees with all of the feminine admirers of her husband who deem him one of the handsomest rascals in celluloid . . . Is descended from a family that has been progressively Italian, French, Polish and English . . . perhaps "chronologically" is the word . . . Anyhow, his forbears in Italy were called Donatello . . . Which is quite a name, as such things go . . . At 16 he recited before church societies and similar organizations . . . Which, of course, was too bad . . . Then the great urge got him . . . He had to become an actor . . . He must have been pretty good, because at 17 he made his debut as Lucius in "Julius Caeser" . . . I hope there is a character by that name in "Julius Caesar" . . . For eight years after that he toured the English provinces with stock companies . . . Then the big chance . . . On October 1, 1930, he made his London debut in "Knave and Queen" . . . After that, S. R. O. signs everywhere he played . . . First appearance on the screen was as Thomas Culpeper in "The Private Life of Henry VIII," with Charles Laughton, Merle Oberon, Elsa Lanchester and all the others that came on to fame after that admirable flicker . . . Bob, and I hope you will pardon the familiarity, is tall, brown-haired and blue-eyed and recognizes two bosses . . . John and Hoanna, his small son and daughter . . . His home is in Hampstead, England, and he calls it "Two Gables" . . . Probably because it has either more or less than that! . . . So now you know.

One, it seems, misses all of his social opportunities. Consider, for example, the plight of the drama editor, who coddles a summer cold that amounts almost to an off-season attack of the flu, and reaches his desk so tardily that he misses a call from the combined intellects of the cinema industry in this territory! Here I was late in getting down—or up, as the case may be—and who should call, in the meantime, but Carter Barron, Loew's Eastern division manager; Frank La Falce, director of advertising and publicity for the Warner organization in Washington; Hardie Meakin, manager of RKO-Keith's; Lou Brown, in charge of Loew advertising and publicity in Mr. Barron's bailiwick and probably a few gun-bearers and fan-wavers. That, as I have set down here too many times before, is the way life is!

Would You Care to See It?

Would you care to see "Smilin' Through," the screen version of stage play in which Norma Shearer achieved one of her most notable successes, in a revival to be screened at one of Loew's theaters?

This play, made famous on the stage by Jane Cowl, was made first as a silent picture by Norma Talmadge and later as a talking film play by Norma Shearer. The stellar actress, of course, is compelled to appear in a dual impersonation—a difficult task, at best, but one which Miss Shearer, but no more adeptly than Miss Talmadge, contrived in admirable fashion.

But here is the main idea.

There have been many letters and requests from Washingtonians for a return of this love classic. Loew Divisional Manager Carter Barron announced yesterday that if a sufficiently large number of local theatergoers desired to view this film treat, he would gladly schedule a return showing.

The dramatic editor of this paper has been authorized to ask readers to write in their views, and to award a cash prize of $5 for the letter that most interestingly requests a return of this film in which the gifted Norma Shearer scored her greatest triumph.

In addition to the $5 prize for the best letter, five pairs of tickets also will be awared for the next five best letters, should "Smilin' Through" be shown locally.

I Am the Judge.

The dramatic editor of this paper is to be the sole judge, and will select those letters he seems most interesting.

So get busy today and pen your reasons for wanting to see "Smilin' Through" again.

It is in this M-G-M production that Miss Shearer plays a dual role, a part which duplicates that of Jane Cowl, who starred in the original New York stage production. Leslie Howard and Fredric March and other stellar film personalities share honors with her in this grandest of all romances.

So there you are, in a manner of speaking. Do you want it or do you not want it? And if not, why not?

So in come Myrtis Morgan, with her black hair plastered down over her ears in severest simplicity, after the manner of a miniature Madonna, and Bob Pitkin, of the Willard Players, offering "East Lynne" on the stage of the National Press Club auditorium, wondering what had become of the review of their opening performance, which should have been in yesterday morning's issue of The Post. I had been wondering the same thing. Here, I hope, on this same page, is another one by the patient, Mr. W. A. Whitney, which I trust will be acceptable, and accepted, 24 hours overdue. Saturday, I shall view the goings-on in person, what with there being beer and pretzels and everything

Busy Business.

Universal City studios have never been so busy as at present. Ten companies have just completed simultaneous work at the studio and Carl Laemmle has ordered the pace to continue, with eight productions in work during August and nine during September. At present, John Stahl's "Magnificent Obsession" with Irene Dunne, Robert Taylor, Charles Butterworth and Betty Furness, is well in production. James Whale's "Wild Night," adapted from "Hangover Murders," with Edward Arnold, Constance Cummings, Sally Eilers, Robert Young and a large supporting cast, is in its second week.

May Robson has started in "Three Kids and a Queen," and Charles Farrell in a football picture whose title is "Fighting Youth." Zasu Pitts and Hugh O'Connell will finish "Alone Together" this week. Clark Williams, Jean Rogers and Noah Beery, jr., are starting "Tailspin Tommy in the Great Air Mystery" on Wednesday. In the cutting room are the Edmund Lowe production, "King Solomon of Broadway," the Noah Beery, jr., picture made on the Painted Desert, "Stormy;" Jack Holt in "Storm Over the Andes," and "She Gets Her Man" with Zasu Pitts and Hugh O'Connell.

Soon to Begin.

Scheduled to begin within the next ten days are Jack Holt in "Riverboat Gamblers" to be directed by Louis Friedlander; Buck Jones in "Ivory Handled Guns"; "Next Time We Love," co-starring Margaret Sullavan and Francis Lederer under the direction of E. H. Griffith; "East of Java," with Charles Bickford, directed by George Melford; "Yellowstone," a Henry MaRae production and "Fast and Furious" with Jack Oakie.

September will see the start of "Sutter's Gold"; "Showboat," with Irene Dunne, a musical Carl Laemmle, jr. production; "Spinster Dinner," with Carole Lombard, directed by Walter Lang; a third Jack Holt feature; a third Buck Jones feature, "Giant Plane," and the first American feature starring Marta Eggerth, tentatively titled "Song of Joy" and being written by Hans Kraly.

That was a great party to the "Going Native" revue cast backstage at Loew's Fox Theater last night. I wish I could have got to it.

Kate Capers.

Mr. Ray Henderson, that assiduous stentor for the theatrical activities of Katharine Cornell, is having a very tough summer of it, rusticating in pastoral Europe. His latest bulletin to this column reads something like this—exactly like it, as a matter of cold fact, or hot fact, the temperatures being what they are and these being Mr. Henderson's precise words:

Strassburg, France.—As last summer she visited Verona, legendary scene of Shakespeare's "Romeo and Juliet," which she acted last winter, so this year Katharine Cornell has traced the life of Joan of Arc in France, since she plans to appear in G. Bernard Shaw's "Saint Joan" next February.

"To stand in the old market place in Rouen, near the place where Joan was burned was a deeply moving experience. As perhaps nothing else could have done to such a degree, it made actual to me the tragedy of the saint," said Miss Cornell, who is spending a few days in the famous old Maison Rouge in this city before continuing her motor trip to Innsbruck, in Austria.

Rereading the Bard.

Miss Cornell has been rereading many of Shakespeare's plays with a view to deciding which of his dramas she next will produce, but she confessed she had come to no decision, except that eventually she hopes to present "Macbeth" and "Antony and Cleopatra." She has restudied "Romeo and Juliet," which she will play on tour in America for three months this autumn, and she has devoted much time to the study of "Saint Joan."

"I have read a number of new manuscripts, but so far have found nothing I care to produce. I am anxious to obtain a new, modern play, as I do not want to confine myself entirely to classic drama."

The summer has not been all work for the actress. As a matter of fact, she thinks she has been exceedingly lazy except for walking and motoring. From Innsbruck she may go to the Salzburg festival, or she may continue southward into Italy, whence she plans to sail for New York early in September.

And yesterday in this space we propounded one of the most heinous offenses against the English tongue that can be wrought. And not a public ripple. This should have been the signal for boulders and grapeshot, fired at random, but it went unnoticed. What's the matter with youse guys, don't you know your lankwitch? But, after all, what's the difference between a "her" and a "she?" There are no rewards for the correct answer to this one!

Intramural Pufflicity Note.

And how did you like Master Bill McCormick pinch-hitting as the Postilion last evening at 10:30—or is that night?

All very elegant, until he came to that Nels Bells business. After all, my first name is different!

This week, "East Lynne!"

And with the extra added attractions of beer and pretzels, Washington boisterously greeted the revival of that beloved war-horse of the mid-sixties as the revamped Willard Players romped through 11 scenes of lusty melodrama in the auditorium of the National Press Club.

Not the slightest attempt was made by any of the players to perform with restraint, nor was there any serious effort put forth to deliver a convincing delineation. What the players did do, however, was to give the audience a new experience by grossly overplaying every slightest bit of action, by accentuating the lines beyond all reasonable bounds, and by gesticulating in the most affected manner: the whole becoming a unit of unmitigated hilarity.

Actors "Kid" Play.

No disrespect was intended the work or the memory of the late Ellen Price Wood—rather was this production a burlesque of "East Lynne" extremely played for the benefit of a modern-minded 1935 audience. Topping without exception, all his commendable fellow actors in this mad offering was Robert Pitkin, whose delineation of Sir Francis sets a new high in the portrayal of melodramatic villainy. Appropriately mustachioed, Mr. Pitkin, whose chronological age and histrionic experience further fortified him in the role, "gave all," and the more hissing, the more despicable he became.

The complicating subplots are carried largely by Isham Keith and Margaret Hatfield who add not a few of the evening's many moments of gayety. M. Forney Reese, eschewing villainy for the nonce, here becomes the paternal guardian of Lady Isabel. Harriet Borden, as the tyrannical spinster sister; Lucille Bartram, as the maid, and wee David Gatlin Pritchard, as the small son, are all praiseworthy in their parts.

Effectively Staged.

To Hugo Inden for his settings (merely backdrops), be great credit and praise, for he has materially aided in creating an atmosphere ideally suited to the drama. Elizabeth Gatlin Pritchard has commendably directed, overcoming obstacles of time and place to turn out a play quite the "tops" among local productions.

Of Lyman McCrary's accompaniment—well, what would this type of drama be without its atmospherelc piano music? And Mr. McCrary "gives" no less than the actors.

No review would be complete without mention of the many entr'actes, introduced by Mr. Keith, and performed by nearly every member of the cast, solo and in groups. These divertissements are as much an integral part of the evening's entertainment as the play itself! And as expertly and showmanly presented.

Meet Capt. Alan "Toots" Gaskell!

This smiling young man, despite the fact that he looks exactly like Clark Gable, is the hard-boiled skipper of the storm-tossed bark sailing the wildest of the world's frontiers in "China Seas," the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer thriller opening today on the screen at Loew's Palace Theater. Jean Harlow, Wallace Beery, Lewis S. Stone, Robert Benchley, C. Aubrey Smith, Dudley Digges and scores more share hardships with Capt. "Toots," as Miss Harlow persists in calling him.

Fourteenth summer festival at the Sylvan Theater. A pan-American program by the U. S. Army Band, conducted by Capt. Thomas F. Darcy. Vocal soloist: Rosalmira Colomo and Mildred Colvin. Instrumental soloists: Tommy Herbert and Joseph L. Young. Dances by Marian Chace, Amelie Preische, Mary Williams, Florence Musey and Polly Weihe. Stereopticon slides with commentary by Julius G. Zier.

Musical resources of the American republics were not drawn upon to any considerable extent in this entertainment, the tenor of which was international amity in the western hemisphere. With the exception of the overture to Carlos Gomes' opera, "Il Guarani," the compositions selected were of a popular character. If "La Paloma" and "Princesita" were missing, Ponce's "Estrellita" was not, and Tommy Herbert, of the Marine Band, who played a violin transcription of it, was warmly applauded. The attendance was large, and the enjoyment of the program evident.

Senorita Colomo's richly tinted contralto was heard to advantage in Esperon's "La Borrachita," Grever's "Lamento Gitano," Arriola's "Cielito Lindo" and a Mexican folksong, "El Cefiro." Mrs. Colvin chose a solo version of the barcarolle from "Les Contes d'Hoffmann," Alicia Needham's "Four Ducks on a Pond" and Rudolf Friml's "Amour, Toujours Amour."

Marian Chace gave a graceful performance of a Panamanian danzon, "Mi Nata," by Dalimany, and was joined by her assistants in Valverde's lively tango, "Y como le va." A symbolical stage grouping, in which Maude Howell Smith represented North America and Hester Walker Beall, South America, closed the entertainment.

Police Must Resign From Military Unit

Maryland Bans Officers From National Guard.

Baltimore, Md., Aug. 16.—Members of the Maryland State police force can either be policemen or National Guardsmen, but they can not be both, it was ruled today by Maj. J. Purdon Wright, superintendent of the constabulary unit.

The ruling was made when the head of the department learned that there are a number of Guardsmen on the police force, and that they are expected to attend the summer Guard encampments of two weeks. Maj. Wright has informed policemen that they will not be permitted to attend maneuvers in Pennsylvania.

Maj. Wright has conferred with Maj. Gen. Milton A. Reckford, who agreed that because of the kindred nature of services of both organizations it would be permissible for the police-soldiers to resign from the militia.

Hadley Grants Tigers 4 Hits as Nats Win, 8-1, to Divide Series

This Morning...

With Shirley Povich

Detroit, Aug. 16.

THE Yankees, who are due here tomorrow for a four-game series with the Tigers, may be six games behind the lead, but they are in a position to do a public service for all those folks in the city who still refuse to acknowledge that the sun both rises and sets in the young business men who wear Detroit uniforms. Four straight Yankee victories might, perhaps, dissipate the current belief here that the Tigers are the little tin players of baseball.

POVICH.

If the homage paid the Tigers by the local press and public is not nauseating to neutral nostrils, then it is at least highly disgusting.

Again this season, the Tigers can do no wrong. All has been forgiven them for what happened in the 1934 World Series when the Dean boys of St. Louis gave 'em the jitters and the loser's share of the World Series dough.

Inspired by a fawning Detroit press, local fans are again losing their sanity over the Tigers. They are stopping cabs on the street, and paying the meter charges just to listen to the radio report of the Tigers' games broadcast by announcers who are as biased as a storm trooper's report of a Nazi riot.

Newspapers ordinarily shrewd in their judgment of news values are tumbling over themselves in an effort to outdo competitors in heaping adulation on the Tigers. From the type factories, headlines have been purchased that set a new high for sensationalism. Across the top of the front page, screaming type details not only the Tigers' triumph, but the new formula for Schoolboy Rowe's 2-month-old child, Tommy Bridges' painful hangnail and Mickey Cochrane's fever blister.

THERE is one guy here who writes for the morning paper under the nom de plume of "Iffy the Dopester" who requires two columns each day to say nothing while singing the praises of the Tigers and second-guessing visiting managers. Even the more sane of the Detroit folks are offended by his silly spouting. Of late, he has been hitting a new low in humor, a new high in absurdity by his unblushing encomiums.

This fellow has exhausted every known word of praise for the Tigers. So now he has adopted a new tack. The Detroit infield of Greenberg, Gehringer, Rogell and Owen is not only the swellest infield in the league. It is the Battalion of Death, no less. The Detroit outfield of Goslin, White and Fox is no mere outfield. To Iffy, the dope, they represent the Royal Flying Corps, nobly bringing down enemy hits.

And for Charlie Gehringer, who is known for his close-mouthed attention to duty, albeit a great ball player, Iffy has reserved a special title. When Gehringer came out of the dugout the other day to drive in the winning run with a pinch hit, it was no mere pinch hit by Gehringer. To Iffy in the public prints the next morning, it was nothing less than a lethal blow by the Silent Knight.

The afternoon sheets, while not so absurd in their adoption of the Tigers, are nevertheless still tumbling over themselves to outstrip each other in the race to deify the Detroit club. But they find it hard to keep the pace of the morning paper which daily assigns four reporters, to say nothing of photographers, to cover the Tigers' home games.

IT would be nice to say that the Tigers aren't spoiled in the face of all this, but that would not be exactly the truth. Manager Mickey Cochrane maintains his usual level-headedness, but there are those among 'em who have been reading of their virtues so consistently in the home prints that they now believe they are men of destiny.

Photographers clutter the dressing rooms, bivouack outside the players' homes, stop them on the streets and snap them in every conceivable pose. Crowds gather at their every appearance, pressing for autographs and slapping 'em on the back. They see the pictures in the papers, receive special lots of prints from admiring photographers and otherwise are petted and pampered on every hand.

So, Yankees, do your duty. Mop 'em up in four straight games and restore to a city and a ball team a sense of values. It's been lost out here. Some day somebody out here in Detroit is going to discover that the Tigers are not divine beings, just a lot of ball players. He'll probably hang for blasphemy.

Miss Stammers Prideful Girl, Neither Snobbish Nor 'Stuck Up'

By Paul Gallico,

A Special Correspondent.

FOREST HILLS, Long Island, Aug. 16.—Did you ever watch an athlete in some game or other, some one you did not know personally, and try to figure out from their personal appearance and mannerism and behavior, what kind of a person he or she was?

Here we are, for instance, in the sultry, steamy press marquee at Forest Hills watching Kay Stammers, the 21-year-old English girl, play Helen Jacobs in the first of the Wightman Cup matches between the girl tennis teams of the United States and Great Britain. What can we tell about Miss Stammers, sitting here, armed with field glasses and an inquisitive mind? What manner of person is she off the court? And how much can we tell from the brief view of her in action against Miss Jacobs?

She has green eyes, dark eyebrows, natural and unplucked and straight, rather than arched. Her hair is brown and the ends have had a permanent wave fried onto them, and curl attractively. Her nose is short and so is her upper lip. Girls with short upper lips are supposed to be sweet and good natured. There is no lip stick on her mouth, nor any make-up on her face. Her ears are small and set close to her head. She plays with mouth open and her eyes wide, too. There is a good deal of pride and confidence in the eyes and the carriage of the head.

She wears a brief white tennis frock that stops above her knees and is much more graceful and swingy than shorts, a white bandeau eye shade, white half socks and white sneakers. There is no touch of color to her except a gold bangle on her right arm. It is one of those bracelets with little gold trinkets dangling from it. She can wear it on her right arm because she plays tennis with her left. In other words, a southpaw.

The bracelet might tell you that

Johnson Will Not Return to Indians

Published reports that Walter Johnson, deposed manager of the Cleveland Indians, would succeed Billy Evans next season as general manager of the club were emphatically denied yesterday by Alva Bradley, Tribe owner.

Branding the report as so much "idle prattle," Bradley denied that he intends to visit Washington for a conference with Johnson regarding the rumored change. He declared himself perfectly satisfied with Evans and the manner in which he has handled the club's affairs and reiterated that the former umpire will not be dismissed, or that he intends to resign.

Johnson last night denied any knowledge of his appointment as Evans' successor. He intimated that he is content to remain on his Germantown, Md., farm unless requested by Bradley to scout for the club the remainder of the season.

16-Hit Attack Is Aimed at 3 Hurlers

By Shirley Povich,

A Staff Correspondent.

DETROIT, Aug. 16.—Detroit's rampaging Tigers, pennant bound with their six-game lead, met up with a slight mishap today in a collision with Bump Hadley, Washington pitcher.

Hadley astonishing the Tigers, the Nats and the 7,000 fans in the park, produced his best pitching effort of the season, held the Tigers to four hits, checked in with an 8-1 victory, and brought the Nats an even break in the four-game series.

The lone source of comfort to the Tigers were the figures on the scoreboard which revealed an 8-5 defeat of the Yankees in Cleveland, thus enabling Detroit to retain its six-game lead over New York.

In only two innings did more than three Tigers face Hadley whose fast curve was working almost magically. One of the four Detroit hits was a bunt by Greenberg, who also collected a single to right field. The only other Tigers to hit safely were Jo Jo White who tripled in the fourth and Goslin who singled in the seventh for the final Detroit safety.

Kress Leads Attack.

Red Kress with two doubles and a single was the nominal leader of the Nats' 16-hit attack against Elden Auker, Ed Sullivan and Elon Hogsett, but Jake Powell with a triple and a double figured in four of the Nats' eight runs.

When Manush obligingly popped out with two men on base, Auker escaped from the first inning without damage despite Stone's single and a pair of errors by Owen and Greenberg, but he was pummeled for four runs in the third.

With one out, Stone doubled into right field and raced to third on Myer's single to right. Manush again popped up, but the first Washington run of the inning crossed the plate on a double steal by Stone and Myer. Travis blasted a single off Auker's shin and Jake Powell dropped a handle hit into short right field for three bases that scored Myer and Travis. Kress scored Powell with a brisk single to right.

Auker Yanked.

The Nats boosted their lead to 6-0 in the fourth, but Auker wasn't there for the finish. After Kuhel had singled and was forced by Stone, Myer doubled against the left center-field bleachers to put runners on first and third.

Whereupon Auker was withdrawn and the left-handed Joe Sullivan sent in to pitch. Stone crossed the plate when Manush grounded to Greenberg, and Myer scored when Greenberg muffed Travis' meek grounder.

Hitless for three innings, the Tigers got a run back in the fourth when White tripled to center field, but Travis cut off another tally when he threw to the plate on Goslin's grounder to nip Cochrane's attempt to score.

Against Sullivan, the Nats were runless for four innings, but they picked up two runs against Elon Hogsett in the ninth when Powell doubled to left, Bolton walked, Hadley bunted on a successful squeeze play and Kuhel singled to center.

The Tigers meanwhile were finding Hadley unyielding. He still had a two-hit game in his possession going into the seventh and he escaped that inning with some clever pinch-pitching. After Greenberg had led off with a safe bunt and Goslin's single to right put him on third with none out, Hadley disposed of Rogell on a pop-up, struck

Indians Rally Twice; Beat Yanks, 8-5

By the Associated Press.

CLEVELAND, Aug. 16.—The Yankees' various manifestations of wildness cost them a chance to gain a game on the league-leading Detroit Tigers as they tossed away two leads and lost the final game of the series to the Indians, 8 to 5, today.

First, Johnny Allen yielded to a fit of peevishness in the third inning, tossed his glove high into the air and started an argument with Umpire Harry Geisel about a called ball. He was thumbed out of the game and Pat Malone, who came in, failed to hold a 3-0 lead, tossing a home run ball to Earl Averill with two on base.

The Yanks pulled ahead at 5-4 in the sixth but Jack Saltzgaver made two errors, Malone handed out a walk and wild-pitched one run home and Pinch-Hitter Ralph Winegarner knocked in two more with a single to give Cleveland the decision.

By Alan Gould,

Associated Press Sports Editor.

FOREST HILLS, N. Y., Aug. 16.—Thanks to a stunning, uphill triumph for left-handed, winsome Katherine Stammers over the sturdy American champion, Helen Jacobs, Great Britain gained a 2-1 lead over the United States today in the competition for the Wightman Cup, international women's tennis trophy.

The 21-year-old English girl struck the blow that may prove decisive in Britain's challenge to America's four-year winning streak. Making her debut in cup play, she rallied courageously, after being on the verge of defeat several times in a bristling extra set, to achieve the downfall of Miss Jacobs, 5-7, 6-1, 9-7.

As expected, England's No. 1 player, hard-hitting Dorothy Round, decisively defeated Mrs. Ethel Burkhardt Arnold of Los Angeles in the second singles encounter, 6-0, 6-3, but the American girls averted a rout and likewise contributed to the day's surprising developments by capturing the doubles with unforeseen ease.

The British had hopes of a sweep as they sent their Wimbledon championship combination, Miss Stammers and Freda James, into the final match, but they were quickly swept off their feet by the American team of Miss Jacobs and Sarah Palfrey Fabyan, of Boston, national titleholders. In a duel dominated mainly by Mrs. Fabyan's sparkling volleys and effective service, the United States posted its first victory in defense of the cup by scores of 6—3, 6—2.

An even break in the four matches which conclude the series tomorrow will clinch the cup for England for the first time since 1930. The Americans will need three out of four to keep the trophy for the fifth consecutive year. The odds favor the challengers, with Miss Stammers likely to take the measure of Mrs. Arnold and Miss Round appearing to have an even chance against Miss Jacobs, apart from what may happen in the remaining singles or doubles contest.

Miss Jacobs' defeat was a shock to the home forces as well as a surprise to most of the 2,500 spectators who endured blistering heat to watch today's competition on the turf courts of the West Side Club's Stadium. The three-time American champion, unbeaten in Wightman

Boston Beaten By Chisox in 14th, 4-3

By the Associated Press.

CHICAGO, Aug. 16.—Young Vernon Kennedy outlasted Wes Ferrell in a marathon mound duel today and the White Sox ended their seven-game losing streak with a 14-inning victory over the Boston Red Sox, 4 to 3.

Tony Piet's single to right center with one out in the home fourteenth scored Luke Sewell with the winning run.

Kennedy, who yielded ten hits, helped himself to a 6-to-1 lead in five innings when he twice scored Jack Hayes with a double and single, the first of his three hits. Boston, however, forced the overtime by scoring single runs on a walk and Manager Joe Cronin's double in the sixth and Melillo's triple in the seventh.

Helen Moody Will Forego U. S. Event

Tennis Queen, in Sudden Decision, Will Shun Forest Hills Play.

By the Associated Press.

SAN FRANCISCO, Aug. 16.—Helen Wills Moody, recrowned queen of the world's tennis courts, will not play in the national championships at Forest Hills, she announced here today.

"I feel that I have had enough tournament tennis for the season," Mrs. Moody said. "The tournament at Wimbledon and the journey was an effort, and another trip would be more than I feel able to undertake at this time.

"I shall continue playing tennis here in California, during the coming year, and hope to take part in the championship tournaments next year."

Friends Are Surprised.

Queen Helen's sudden decision to forego participation in the Forest Hills play surprised friends here. Since her arrival from the East a few days ago she has practiced assiduously. Less than 24 hours before she made her announcement, she admitted she hoped to win the national crown once again and that she planned to leave for the East next week.

While Mrs. Moody would not discuss her default to Helen Jacobs at Forest Hills in the 1933 national championships, it was no secret that she did not consider her triumph over her rival at the recent Wimbledon tournament had completely wiped out the stigma attached to the default incident by tennis fans who refused to believe she had injured her back.

Grant Eliminated By Budge in 3 Sets

Small Atlantan Bows in Newport Tennis.

By the Associated Press.

Newport, R. I., Aug. 16.—Bryan Grant, Atlanta's little tennis giant, today took a beating in the semi-finals of the Casino tennis tournament from tall, wiry and red-headed Don Budge, of Oakland, Calif.

Just as Grant was on the verge of collapse, the match ended with the Californian on the long end of an 8—6, 6—4, 6—1 count.

This triumph, Budge's second straight over Grant, moved him into the finale against Frank X. Shields, of New York, tennis' gift to Hollywood, who had an easy session turning back his doubles partner, Frankie Parker, of Spring Lake, N. J., in another straight set semifinals, 6—3, 6—3, 6—4.

Staubly Scores Upset Over Sherfy in Singles

Although Don Garber won two matches yesterday to advance to the semi-finals of the Embassy Courts tennis tournament, hard-hitting Al Staubly was the real star of the day. The former G. W. netman threw caution to the winds in a quarter-final tussle as he upset Larry Sherfy, seeded No. 1, 3—6, 6—3, 9—7.

Cards Win, 1-0 Dizzy Gives 3 Blows

Schumacher Is Effective Until Ninth; Giants' Lead Is Sliced.

By Edward J. Neil.

Associated Press Sports Writer.

NEW YORK, Aug. 16.—Long, lean Dizzy Dean, sniffling from a head cold, snapped his long right arm at the Giants today as if it were a black snake whip driving them from the plate, shutting them out, 1-0, to pull the Cardinals back within three games of the National League lead.

Big Diz allowed only three hits, one of them a scratchy bounder over his own head, as he became the first pitcher in the majors to win 20 games this season.

To win Dizzy had to best Hal Schumacher, Giants right-hand ace, in one of the tightest pitching duels of the years, the closest match so far in the five-game series that now stands at two victories each.

Martin Scores Run.

Schumacher himself allowed but three hits up to the ninth inning when the Cards broke up the ball game. Pepper Martin, hitting and running again like the wild horse of several years ago, singled to right, stole second, his sixteenth theft of the season, reached third on Frankie Frisch's scratch single, and scored the lone run on Joe Medwick's long fly to center field.

It was the first victory of the season for Dizzy over the club he beat six times last year in seven tries. Diz fanned five and walked two, and for the last five innings he was getting faster and faster as he set the Giants down in order.

Dizzy came close to trouble only twice, in the first and fourth innings. He walked Dick Bartell with one out in the first. After Bartell stole second Met Ott advanced him to third with a scratch bounder over the pitcher's head, but Bill Terry had fanned and George Davis ended the inning by flying out. In the fourth Ott walked and Al Cuccinello put him on second with a clean single to left, but he got no farther. Joe Moore's double to right in the third was the only other hit off Dean.

Giants Star Afield.

The Giants' infield was particularly brilliant, despite two early errors, as Schumacher paced along with Big Diz for eight innings. Schumacher fanned three and walked none. Martin reached third in the first inning after an error by Dick Bartell, a sacrifice, and Frisch's infield single. Gus Mancuso's wild throw when Jack Rothrock stole second after singling in the sixth put the runner on third. But that was as far as anyone got up to the ninth.

There were 5,000 women in the ladies' day turnout of 14,500.

All-Claiming Program Is Offered

Lt. Greenock, Chewawa Take Place Positions in Two Races.

By the Associated Press.

NARRAGANSETT PARK, R. I., Aug. 16.—Percy M. Pike's Opera Bouffe won the fifth and C. C. Hastings' Center Lane won the sixth race here today, these two events being the features of an all-claiming program. The purses in each were $1,200, the other six purses being $1,000.

Opera Bouffe led from start to finish of the five and a half furlongs of the fifth, which was for two-year-olds in the $3,000 class. Retired and Above Board were out front with the filly for a time, but they both faltered in the stretch run and Lieut. Greenock moved to place, half a length back o- Opera Bouffe.

Zowie Runs Third.

Shot and Shell set the early pace in the sixth, a mile and one sixteenth for three-year-olds and upwards in the $2,500 group. Chewawa, the favorite, and Center Lane were closest in attendance of the pace, with the Hastings horse passing the leader as they rounded for home. Shot and Shell tired and Chewawa placed, a head back of Center Lane.

Orange Wins Long Tilt From Staunton

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Orange, Va., Aug. 16.—Orange won its second extra inning game of the week at Gordonsville Thursday, beating a hard-fighting Staunton Club in 11 frames, 5 to 4. The big bats of Harris and Huffman spoke loud and long behind Tom Howie's fine pitching, but Orange coming up in their half of the eleventh with the taste of a spirited eighth-inning rally that saw two runs come in to deadlock the count were not to be denied. Mundy walked to open the home half and when Huffman errored on Utz's single, scored the deciding tally. Lohr making his first league start pitched creditably for nine innings, Tisdale relieving him in the tenth with men on second and third and two out. The latter allowed one hit, that in the eleventh, and then struck out the next three batters.

CHIMNEY TOP, well placed, was forced to take up sharply approaching the far turn, recovered gamely, but was unable to reach the winner. COIN closed gamely in the last quarter-mile. FOREWARNED had speed from the start and faltered in the last three-sixteenths.

OPERA BOUFFE, unruly at the post, went to the front in the opening furlong, drew clear, withstood determined opposition from LT. GREENOCK midway of the stretch, and drew out slightly in the last sixteenth. LT. GREENOCK, in the first three-sixteenths, moved up leaving the back stretch, went to the leadership with the leader, was unable to improve his position in the drive. ZOWIE, unable to enter into contention during the first quarter-mile, came willingly on the outside through the stretch.

SIXTH RACE—One and one-sixteenth miles. Purse, $1,200; claiming. For 3-year-olds and upward. Start good from stall gates. Won driving; place, same. Went to post at 5:30. Off at 5:31. Winner, C. C. Two-dollar mutuels paid—CENTER LANE, $15.50, $6.60, $4.20; CHEWAWA, $3.80, $2.80; XANDRA, $3.50.

CENTER LANE, kept within striking distance of the leaders while under slight restraint, moved up on the outside to take command in the stretch and, hard ridden, held CHEWAWA safe. The latter, prominent all the way, wore down SHOT AND SHELL for the lead and, despite hard driving, was unable to catch the winner. XANDRA improved her position steadily, but was unable to reach the leaders under punishment.

SEVENTH RACE—One and one-sixteenth miles. Purse, $1,200; claiming. For 3-year-olds and upward. Start good from stall gates. Won driving; place, same. Went to post at 6:01. Off at 6:01½. Winner, A. B. R. PINCHOT went to the front at once, withstood repeated bids from LADY FLINDERS, and held her safe at the close. LADY FLINDERS, in closest pursuit of the leaders throughout, continued gamely to the end. FAIRY STREET improved her position gradually and closed with good energy. MISS CAREFUL, well up, made a determined effort to reach the leaders, was not good enough, and faltered slightly in the last five-sixteenths.

EIGHTH RACE—One and one-sixteenth miles. Purse, $1,000; claiming. For 3-year-olds and upward. Start good from stall gates. Won driving; place, same. Went to post at 6:31. Off at 6:33. Winner, Miss J. Two-dollar mutuels paid—ZEMBLA, $13.00, $6.60, $3.90; WINGED FLIGHT, $4.40, $3.00; BY PRODUCT, $3.40.

ZEMBLA, as usual, was slow to begin, started moving up on the outside leaving the back stretch, closed stoutly through the stretch and was going clear at the end. WINGED FLIGHT went into contention with a rush on the outside and, going to the front in the stretch, was unable to keep pace in the closing drive. BY PRODUCT, on the inside throughout, closed gamely in the stretch. ON SIR was well placed from the start, but was unable to keep pace in the drive.

65 Golfers Enter National Amateur Trials at Indian Spring

Eleven Places Available in Locality

FOR every golfer who leaves Indian Spring Country Club at sundown on Tuesday eligible to play in the National Amateur at Cleveland September 9-14, almost five golfers will be blaming their putters, the traps and themselves for elimination. Entries for the sectional qualifying for this locality, released this morning by the United States Golf Association, reveal a field of 65 eager to vie for the eleven available places.

Virtually every name that has figured in the amateur golf headlines for the past few years and longer is included in the hopeful group which is part of the record Nation-wide entry list of 954. While the star-studded field is competing at the Prince Georges County course, equally formidable groups will be separating the wheat from the chaff at 25 other points throughout the country.

While the District champion, Gene Vinson, will not compete due to injuries received in a plane crash, the Capital area will be ably represented. Roger Peacock, Indian Spring; John C. Shorey, Kenwood; Martin F. McCarthy, Columbia; Harry G. Pitt, Manor; Miller B. Stevinson, Columbia; Maurice Nee, Columbia; Volney G. Burnett, Indian Spring and Billy Dettweiler are among the favored in the District group.

Two Regional Champs.

Two sectional champs will make or break at the local course. They are Morton McCarthy, Middle Atlantic titleholder, from Princess Anne Country Club at Virginia Beach, and Robert F. Reigel, Southern champion, from Hermitage Country Club, at Richmond. Maryland also sends a capable group, including Spencer Overton, of Hillendale, and Donald McPhail, of Baltimore Country Club, qualifiers last year.

Only a comparative handful were out for practice rounds yesterday. Burnett, who has been burning up his home course, shared the low 73 with Dave Davis, a transfer from California. Martin McCarthy took an 80 while experimenting and Roger Peacock used the day to advantage practicing with his long irons and putter. Stevinson shot a 74; Spencer Overton, the Baltimorean, a 75, and Jim Barnes a 76.

Tuesday's action will be a 36-hole medal play, with the rounds starting at 8:30 a. m. and 12:30 p. m.

Fifteen players, including Lawson Little, defending champion, and all other former titleholders, as well as five foreign competitors, are exempt from sectional qualifying play.

Entries and starting times for this section follow:

"Out Fishin'" ∫ ∫

By Jack Hawley.

ONE week ago today this column scored with the announcement of "big blues up to 8 pounds and more now in S. W. Middles." Today every boatman is booked solidly for this weekend and no boats are available for those that failed to heed the advice to make early reservations.

Several boatmen are booked solid for the next ten days, both at St. Jeromes Creek and Point Lookout. However, this should not interrupt your desire to get out and land a few big blues elsewhere. At this time they are practically all over the bay, with no particular choice as to where they are schooling.

On Thursday of this week we announced that blues weighing up to 6 pounds were breaking in Herring Bay and were being caught either trolling or chumming. Credit for this tip-off is given to Capt. Bob Birchett. This news was taken seriously by only a small number of local anglers, because in recent years Herring Bay fishing has diminished considerably.

Gets Good Haul.

One local angler, H. R. Gooding, of 1435 South Carolina avenue, in company with his brother, W. M. Gooding, and son, of Orange, Va., journeyed down to see Capt. Dick Knopp, a very reliable boatman, who substantiated our report and they started out immediately for Holland Point, arriving there at 9 a. m. close to barrel buoy No. 25. The first sight to greet them was a large school of blues heading up the bay and traveling in high gear. They started out for them and were soon alongside, as circling the school was impossible because of the large area and the speed they were traveling.

Soon they began to bring them in on No. 2 Huntington Drones. The school of blues stayed on the surface 45 minutes and had traveled 2 miles in this time before going down, and the result was 36 nice blues from 2½ to 5 pounds each.

A phone call to the following reliable boatmen may assist you for that week-end trip: Capt. Vic Schult, West River 34-F-5; Capt. Bob Birchett, W. R. 18-F-13; Noah Hazard, W. R. 201-F-11; Robert Lee, W. R. 217-F-24. Other boatmen are available at Galesville, Md., but the writer does not have their phone numbers.

Reports from S. W. Middles are tip-top with continued catches of big blues by trolling or chumming. The latter is proving to be the better method and it is certainly getting more fish. Solomons Island boatment report good catches of blues, good sized trout and plenty of croakers. Substantially the same reports are daily arriving from other fishing grounds extending as far south as Messick, Va.

Successful Party.

Mr. and Mrs. Frank J. Sheehan, Dr. J. E. Bernstein, Dr. Eddie Batazzi and M. O. Richter, local sport fishermen, returned Thursday evening from a successful trip to South West Middles. Their catch consisted of 26 large blues (4 to 7½ pounds) caught chumming under the capable direction of Capt. Taft Tippett, Ridge, Md. All blues were caught after 11 a. m., the party being obliged to come ashore because the two bushel of alewives they transported with them from Galesville had been consumed without a strike since 5 in the morning. Mr. Sheehan reports that had they had sufficient chum many more fish could have been taken.

All anglers should keep this in mind and take along plenty of chum. It usually sells for around 50 cents a bushel but with an increased demand it will, no doubt, jump in price. Many parties coming in from the Middles had large catches of big blues with one boat showing a net total of 47, all taken by chumming. With favorable weather all anglers need not hesitate about going to the fishing grounds this week-end.

For Sportsmanship.

Your correspondent after listening about the havoc being raised by the blues and the poor sportsmanship of a few bay commercial fisherman who continue to circle large schools of breaking blues in shallow water and hauling in several thousand pounds in their shallow nets thus destroying the chances of the angler who has spent time and money to get a day's pleasure, so long awaited for, may he be chumming or trolling, is something that should be listed under the category of the duck hunter who wilfully "shoots ducks and geese from an airplane."

If this writer can get the names of commercial fishermen who make a practice of this abominable sport, or if readers of this column will assist the writer (furnishing proof) in securing the name of the boat or other valuable information required to place the blame where it belongs, we will make every effort to take the issue before the State Legislature of both Virginia and Maryland and stamp out the "raiders" through heavy fines and penalties stiff enough to warrant every angler's right to enjoy a day's fishing without the use of firearms and several boatmen are about ready to unload some buckshot on the few that are ruining not only the boatman who depends on the anglers through a short season for his living, but destroying the principles of decent sportsmanship.

Good-Humored 85 Carded By Ruth

By the Associated Press.

CLEVELAND, Aug. 16.—The $3,500 prize Open Golf tournament at the Acacia Country Club today was mostly a lot of fun as far as Babe Ruth, abdicated home run king of baseball, was concerned.

The Bambino turned in an "informal" score of 43, 42—85, for the 18-hole opener, and was in trouble almost as much as out.

Ted Luther, lanky Youngstown, Ohio, pro, paced the field of 150 starters in the 72-hole tournament, as he sliced five strokes off par to score 33, 35—68.

Luther's playing partner, Jake Fassezke, of Jackson, Mich., was second with 34, 35—69, dropping strokes to his rival for the lead on the last two holes.

Burke High.

Billy Burke, of Cleveland, who played with Ruth, was one of a half dozen next in line with 71's. The others were Ray Mangrum, of Los Angeles; Ed Dudley, of Philadelphia; Mel Carpenter, of Columbus, Ohio; Clarence Clark, of Bloomfield, N. J., and Terl Johnson, of Decatur, Ill.

It was the Sultan of Swat, however, who took the largest gallery around, even after he technically disqualified himself on the fourth hole where he carded a seven.

Calls for Shovel.

On the fourth, after a wild hook off the tee, the Babe needed three to get out of the rough. And there, where the going was the toughest, Ruth's humor was at a peak. Turning to his partner, Armour, he said, "Didn't you hear me call for help? I should have brought a shovel."

The Babe then chipped up well, but barely missed his putt as the ball stopped 2 inches from the hole. Ruth casually approached and knocked it away. Then, reminded that "this wasn't the way to play tournament golf," he calmly picked up the ball, and putting it back near the hole, deliberately putted out while the spectators chuckled.

Harris One of Best, Was Rogers' Opinion

By the Associated Press.

LOS ANGELES, Aug. 16.—The sports world mourned tonight the loss of one of its greatest friends.

For Will Rogers gave freely to it his much valued time, his sage, humorous words and his money. While polo was his own chief diversion he was an informal patron of almost every major branch of sports activity.

He was present at one of the last dinners John McGraw, famous New York Giants manager ever gave.

"John," he said to McGraw that night at a hotel here, "I'm always being asked what's the matter with baseball. All right I'll tell you.

"There ain't enough fellows in the game like you and Bucky Harris here and Mike Donlin. Why I can remember when Mike here was playing, if he couldn't hit what the pitcher throwed at him he'd go out and lick the pitcher. What baseball needs is fellows with more intestinal fortitude."

With tears in his eyes, he told Knute Rockne jokes at a memorial luncheon here after the Notre Dame football coach had been killed in the crash of a transport plane in Kansas.

Although Will never played golf he was seen occasionally at winter tournaments here, felt hat pulled down over his eyes, leather jacket open, no tie and a wide grin on his face. He took a great deal of interest in Horton Smith when the tall Missourian first set the golf world afire.

"A great boy is that Horton Smith," he remarked one day as the lad from the Ozark country laced out a long drive. "He's got the greatest pair of corn shucking hands I ever did see."

Rogers gave much of his time, money, the use of his private string of ponies and his own field to the advancement of intercollegiate polo in California.

Miss Dettweiler Wins.

Mrs. John Hay Whitney, of Llangollen, will be his closest competitor with 39 entries, numbering among them that now famous trio, Kinprillia, Two Leggins and Don Diable, which will have to give of their very best this year to win over Royal Wonder, this year's champion at Orange; Petite Poule, Coq Major, Foul Tip and others from Clifton Stables.

Mrs. George Greenhalgh, of Toledo, Ohio, and Springsbury, Clarke County, has entered as one of her string, Brown Bruin, which won the Corinthian class last year.

Homer by Bucher Wins for Dodgers

Down Cubs, 2-1, as Rookie Connects in Ninth.

By the Associated Press.

Brooklyn, Aug. 16.—The Dodgers proved more proficient than the Cubs at home-run hitting today and won the fourth game of their series, 2 to 1, as boundary belts produced all the runs in a mound duel between George Earnshaw and Charley Root.

Jimmy Bucher, first man up in the ninth, poled out the homer that won the game after Stan Hack had hit one for Chicago in the fifth and Tony Cuccinello had evened the count with a circuit drive in the seventh.

Strasburgers Lose Despite Rallies

Special Dispatch to The Post.

WOODSTOCK, Va., Aug. 16.—One of the screwiest games ever witnessed in this section was staged at the Strasburg Park in the Shenandoah County League today as the Woodstock Shamrocks, after leading, 13 to 0, for six innings, barely nosed out the league-leaders, 13 to 10. Coffman on the slab for the Woodstock team held the opposition hitless for six innings, only to blow up in the seventh when he filled the bases, walked a run in and allowed four more runs.

Strasburg also scored five runs in the eighth. Heated discussions arose several times on decisions made by Umpire Coffman. Tim Artz, the southpaw who let Woodstock down with but three hits some time ago, was batted from the hill in the sixth. As a result of today's game, Woodstock is on even terms with Mount Jackson for second place and Strasburg continues to hold a one-game margin for the top position. Edinburg is still commanding the cellar position in the loop.

In both their previous tilts Savoldi pinned back the Donovan cauliflowers but had to resort to questionable tactics in each instance.

Trade Increases Replace Usual Summer Drops

Retail Sales Running 14 to 35 Per Cent Above Last Year.

By the Associated Press.

New York, Aug. 18.—Dun & Bradstreet in its weekly survey of business conditions issued today found that increases replaced decreases customary for most lines at this time of year.

"While the advance of retail distribution was less emphatic than during the week preceding, the advantage over 1934 generally was maintained or extended," the report said.

"It was in the wholesale branches that activity was most pronounced, as buyers hastened to replenish depleted inventories on a rising market, releasing long-postponed orders as delivery delays grew imminent.

"The moderate lowering of the position of some of the industrial indices was not sufficient to disturb greatly the better average established since early July."

It was found that the between-season influence and the severity of the heat combined to prevent sizable enlargement in distributive totals for the week. Compared with 1934, however, average retail sales for the country were 14 to 35 per cent higher.

Wholesale Markets Crowded.

* * * *

"Fewer complaints were heard regarding the rising-price trend in many lines, as diminishing inventories forced immediate replacement and the current strength of consumer buying left small room for doubt regarding the extent of fall merchandise movements.

* * * *

"Industrial operations went ahead at an unusual pace for this time of year, the average running 20 to 25 per cent higher than for the first half of August, 1934, with many factories reporting output for the seven months at 40 to 60 per cent ahead of last year's figures."

Fox Stockholders Ratify Merger

By the Associated Press.

New York, Aug. 16.—Fox Film Corporation stockholders overwhelmed minority opposition today to approve merger with Twentieth Century Pictures and a recapitulation plan, in the face of a temporary injunction against affirmative steps in completing the fusion. The vote was 2,030,646 shares to 1,945.

Justice Alonzo G. McLaughlin in Brooklyn Supreme Court granted the stay against effecting the merger earlier in the day. He reserved decision until Monday on application for a permanent injunction. The injunction was sought by the All-Continent Corporation and Mrs. Eva Fox, wife of William Fox, who built up the company and then lost control of it.

Bank Reminds Its Customers Of Constitution

Special Dispatch to The Post.

New York, Aug. 16.—The Continental Bank & Trust Co. of New York is sending copies of the Constitution of the United States today to its several thousand stockholders and customers. Accompanying the booklet is a letter from Frederick H. Hornby, president of the Continental, in which he says:

"The Constitution was written by men learned in the law and adept in government and politics. They were experienced in the abuses inseparable from too much government and the evils inherent in too little government.

"The proof of their wisdom and judgment is evidenced by 145 years of social and industrial progress without equal in the history of the world.

"To enact legislation without regard to its constitutionality is tantamount to breaking down the keystone of the arch of our Government. The mere threat of such procedure is disturbing to a vast number of our citizens.

"Legislation by representation is the heritage of all Americans. Our Government, composed of its three branches, legislative, executive and judicial, is a system of checks and balances masterfully sychronized by the provisions of the Constitution. This must be preserved if we are to continue to go forward."

Highlights and Background Of Financial News and Trends

By Carlton A. Shively.

New York, Aug. 16.—Trading in stocks increased as the market shook off its morning decline, induced by profit taking and uneasiness over the legislative outlook. Predictions that Congress would adjourn this week and, in spote of everything, the nearer approach of the autumn season with its golden promise of trade recovery, put the bulls once more into the key positions.

Turnover was around one and a half million shares, or about the same as yesterday, and prices were firmest in the last hour. Both cotton and wheat moved forward. Grains gained nearly a cent a bushel and cotton rose $2 a bale. Little change took place in Treasury bonds, but dollars rallied well against other currencies, with the relaxation of silver sales in London and the return of seasonal demand for our currency.

Speculators found more excitement for a while in commodities than in stocks, but later the forward movement in shares was resumed. Cotton was given another boost by senatorial predictions of a 12 per cent loan announcement. Such predictions have been so numerous and so confident in the past two or three days that the market decided the gamble was worth while.

Senator Russell Regrets.

The last prophecy came from the lips of the Hon. Richard B. Russell, jr., Senator (Democrat) from Georgia, who said he expected hourly announcement of a 12 cent loan, but "regretted that it would not be 14 or 15 cents." What the Senator really regrets is that, to paraphrase a real patriot, he has only one cotton crop to give to his country. He probably will have two next year, for a high price for cotton will certainly (given a bit of aid from Nature) bring out a big crop.

Many think that continuance of the 12 cent loans will shortly put the Government into possession of at least 8,000,000 bales, a good sized crop in itself. At its worst the old Farm Board accumulated only 2,000,000 bales. One of these days that immense holding will have to be disposed of, and when it is the poor Southern cotton planter will pay through the nose for the misdirected efforts of his politicians.

Confusion.

The natural tendency of securities markets to pause for a look around, after their extended advance, was accentuated by the growing confusion at Washington. Hasty passage of tax bills, with riders and amendments of various sorts, and the quick preparation for votes on other measures, about which no one seems to know much, can not but unsettle confidence. Business and individuals have no way of knowing just now what to expect from the law mill. It will be hazardous for anyone to take a decided market position or to make important decisions in his business until after the adjournment of Congress. Even after that the atmosphere will be murky enough.

Today most attention was drawn to the latest additions to the tax bill, either or neither or both of which may be adopted. One is the provision for ending tax-exempt bond sales by the United States Treasury, and the other is the proposal to reopen the silver futures market in this country, with removal of the 50 per cent tax on speculative profits.

Many think the United States no longer needs the benefit of tax exempt bonds in order to secure low rates of interest, and that position is hard to attack so long, as at present, the Treasury virtually dictates money rates through its gold policy and huge spending program. By shutting off competition from corporation financing, as it has done, and by operating to pile up record-breaking excess bank reserves, the Treasury even on long term can borrow at under 3 per cent. It may be argued that, therefore, the tax exemption disappearance would cost no more on Treasury loans and would bring in more tax revenue.

Farce.

The argument sounds stronger than it really is, because of the enormous amount of tax exempts already outstanding, and because of the problems in the way of eliminating State and municipal tax exempt securities. It will take a lot of persuading for the States to give up their privilege of issuing tax exempts, as they would need to do through approval of a constitutional amendment. What seems to be worrying the Administration is not the difficulty in collecting more taxes, but in knowing that some capital is paying no taxes on returns from tax exempt bonds. That trail would lead to some interesting places, no doubt, but it ought to be left outside the main course, which is balancing the outlay with the income, and which above all ought to be cutting the outlay.

Meanwhile the silver mess becomes worse and worse. Nobody but a fanatic or the greediest of politicians could fail to see and be satisfied with the utter failure of the silver purchasing act to do anything except to enrich a handful of silver speculators and to make disastrous confusion in the economic position of China and many other silver countries. It is one experiment par excellence that ought to be dropped according to President Roosevelt's yardstick of trial and error.

Yet Senator Thomas and Senator McCarran say the whole thing is a "farce," not because the silver price has not been boosted, but because it hasn't been put up high enough. They would reopen speculation, clearly for no other reason than that they hope the gamblers would drum up such a wild orgy that the price would go beyond limits, and the Treasury would have to "follow up the market" and lift its official buying price.

Screwy.

What could bring out more distinctly the essential screwiness of the whole New Deal outlook on affairs than Senator Thomas' lament that the Treasury "is seeking to buy the white metal as cheaply as possible instead of driving the price upward?" Perhaps the Indian rajahs simply refuse to let the Treasury pay them more than the going price in the London market. Anyhow many people have long suspected that it was looked upon as decidedly bad form for the New Deal to favor wages, costs, prices, money, production, sense, or anything else on any but an artificial, brain trust-managed basis.

Fenner-Beane Stop Credit.

In line with the recent decision of leading commodity exchanges to prohibit or restrict the extension of credit lines by their members, the Washington office of Fenner & Beane announced last night that beginning August 20 it will discontinue credit extensions on all commodities.

Although there has been strong pressure in the commodity field for such a change, Fenner & Beane is the first large commodity firm to adopt this outright policy, which ends a trade practice that has long been regarded as undesirable.

Margins have usually been required of customers who purchase commodities for speculation. But when purchasers of commodities are recognized members of a commodity trade and use in their regular course of business the commodities they buy, it has heretofore been customary for commodity exchange members to advance to such buyers a credit, instead of requiring the deposit of margin.

U. S. Buying Halts Decline in Silver

By the Associated Press.

New York, Aug. 16.—The United States Treasury appeared today to have the unruly international silver price situation in hand.

In the open market in London the price of the bar metal remained unchanged at 29 pence an ounce, equal to 65.05 cents. The New York price for imported silver for commercial use was unchanged at 65⅜ cents an ounce, after declining 2¾ cents in the last three days.

Banking quarters were of the opinion that the enormous Treasury buying of silver in the past few days, including a record-breaking total of over 25,500,000 ounces on Wednesday, had absorbed most of the immediate offerings from tired speculative long accounts in Europe and the Far East.

Republic Steel Merger Meeting Is Postponed

Cleveland, Aug 16 (A).—A special meeting of stockholders of Republic Steel Corporation to act upon acquiring the assets of the Corrigan, McKinney Steel Co. and other steps involved in the planned merger was adjourned today to September 16.

Myron A. Wick, vice president of the corporation, said all necessary steps to carry out the merger should be completed by that time.

Further growth in airplane traffic between the United States and foreign countries was reported yesterday by the Bureau of Customs. In the past fiscal year 28,354 passengers arrived from abroad, 36.8 per cent more than in the preceding year. More than half the total, or 15,802, entered the country by way of Florida. Arrivals from Canada and Mexico made up the balance.

Canadian Frost, Dry Antipodes Advance Wheat

Large Flour Purchases Also a Factor in Lifting Price.

By the Associated Press.

Chicago, Aug. 16.—Frost in Canada, together with drought in Argentina and Australia, did much today to bring about higher prices for wheat.

Northern Alberta and Saskatchewan Provinces in Canada reported freezing temperatures had apparently caught wheat crops at a critical stage, and that heavy damage was feared to have been done. An additional stimulus to wheat price upturns came from indications of big purchasing of flour at Kansas City, about 500,000 bushels.

Wheat closed firm, ⅝ to 1 cent higher than yesterday's finish; December, 90⅜@90½; corn ½ off to ¼ up; December, 57⅛@57¼; oats unchanged to ½ lower, and provisions varying from 5 cents decline to 50 cents advance.

Helen Jacobs Is Defeated In Upset

Miss Stammers Triumphs in Three-Set Battle; British in Lead.

Cup play since 1932, was a heavy favorite to win, because of her greater experience and more formidable record.

Has Repeated Leads.

After having her early advantage wiped out by Miss Stammers' smashing attack in the second set, Miss Jacobs came back to gain repeated leads in a see-saw final chapter. The Californian seized the breaks to take leads of 5—4 and then 6—5 on games, only to toss them away with her erratic service. Matching her chop strokes against the English girl's sharply hit southpaw drives, Miss Jacobs finally found the pressure too much for her and wilted rapidly at the close.

After being within two points of defeat in the tenth game, Miss Stammers saved herself with a succession of slashing cross-court drives. Again she rallied, after losing a prolonged deuce struggle in the eleventh game. She not only outsteadied, but outmaneuvered Miss Jacobs as she swept four of the last five games, breaking through the American's service at love in the final game.

Plays With Confidence.

Miss Jacobs lost her service ten times. Seldom did she have her first delivery working and her second ball was generally a "set-up" for the hard-hitting English girl. Miss Stammers, after a shaky beginning, played with rare confidence, especially in the "pinches."

Miss Round's victory was one-sided. Mrs. Arnold, making her debut in Cup competition, failed to exhibit the shot-making ability she had displayed in a succession of Eastern tournament triumphs this season. The diminutive California matron, obviously "pressing" too much, was outclassed in every department.

Stars in Doubles.

Mrs. Fabyan, who lost the No. 2 singles berth to Mrs. Arnold, distinguished herself in the doubles. She was ably supported by Miss Jacobs but clearly was the outstanding shot maker among the quartet. Miss Stammers showed the effects of her hard singles match and it was a break through her service that marked the turning point of the first set. The Americans then reeled off four straight games at the start of the second set and easily volleyed their way to victory.

Mrs. Sarah Palfry Fabyan, United States, vs. Mrs. Phyllis Mudford King, Helen Jacobs, United States, vs. Dorothy Round; Ethel Burkhardt Arnold, United States, vs. Katherine Stammers; Dorothy Andrus and Carolin Babcock, United States, vs. Nancy M. Lyle and Evelyn M. Dearman.

St. Bernard Choice In Travers Today

By the Associated Press.

New York, Aug. 16.—With William Woodward's Omaha, the champion, unable to fulfill his engagement in the sixty-sixth running of the Travers at Saratoga tomorrow, the $20,000 stake shaped up as a real horse race today when eight 3-year-olds were named for the 1¼-mile test.

Good Gamble, from Alfred G. Vanderbilt's barns and the only filly in the field, has been assigned the top weight of 120 pounds, but probably will be the second choice to E. D. Shaffer's St. Bernard, which gets in with 115. In the pre-race wagering St. Bernard was quoted at 2 to 1, and Good Gamble at 5 to 2.

Walter M. Jefford's Firethorn is held at 4 to 1. The remainder of the field will be composed of Mrs. John D. Hertz's Count Arthur, Conny Smyth's Direct Hit, Alvin Untermyer's Gold Foam, Warren Wright's Skip It, and Mrs. Dodge Sloane's Young Native.

Kay Stammers Prideful Girl; Not a Snob

she is superstitious and wears it because she thinks it is lucky. Or it might have been a gift from the boy friend back home. Or it might just be a bracelet of which she is fond. But one of the little miniatures on it is a tiny gold tennis racquet, and so our English visitor I think believes in lucky emblems. That much we know about her.

You know that she is an intensely feminine girl. When she came back from the rest period after whipping Miss Jacobs, 6—1, in the second set, her nose and face had been neatly powdered. And so had her legs and ankles. Which is the touch, if you know what I mean. And yet, you know that she isn't vain. There are three vaccination scars on her arm. Funny thing—they are all on her tennis arm, the left. What do you make of that, Watson?

She plays with little expression on her face, but registers disgust when she misses a shot. You can tell that she is neither a snob nor a swelled head, because she is sweet to the ball boys. Her expression often is wistful and she seems very anxious to please. She isn't self-conscious. When the score went to 6—5 against her in the final set, she sat on a stool and permitted a gentleman to squeeze a towel wet with ice water down her neck and back, and loved it. And that is just about all we can deduce from that young lady.

That final set was dramatic in its tenseness as the two girls chased back and forth across the grass. Miss Jacobs was within two points of victory on her own stroke in the tenth game, but the English girl, her short, white skirts flying, pulled out to even the games at 5-all.

The American player broke right back again in the next game, but again her young opponent racked the court with her forcing forehand drives to square the match and then pull into the lead, 7 games to 6. Jacobs took advantage of her rival's brief erratic streak in the next, but the trim English girl, sensing victory, ran out the final two games, taking the last game of the match at love.

ROSEDALE PLAYGROUND, long predominant in girls' activities in the Northeast section, was hard put yesterday to maintain its supremacy.

The pretender to the Northeast throne was Sherwood, a playground that hitherto has been seldom seen and of which little has been heard.

When the girls' track meet had ended Rosedale had scored 39 points and Sherwood 36. The meet was held at the Rosedale Playrounds. It was not until the last event that Mrs. Ruth H. Britt, director at Rosedale, was sure of victory.

Mildred Wilson Victor.

Gas Leaks Destroy War Memorial Trees

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Danville, Va., Aug. 16.—Danville's memorial trees, which were planted in 1918 for Danville men who died in the war, are being gassed to death, according to Wilbur O'Byrne, State forester.

The roots of the maples, he says, have become entangled with gas mains, causing leakage. One-third of the trees have died and others are turning brown.

That's treason; plain anarchy.
Yes, it's even against the law to listen to that bolsheviki stuff.

The Federal Diary

Registered in U. S. Patent Office.

By Loren Hall,
Betting for Morgan Baker.

HONORED for his outstanding photographic work, Fred A. Hutchinson, supervisor, Census Bureau Photographic Laboratory, has been awarded a fellowship by the Royal Photographic Society of Great Britain. He is one of the few Americans to receive this distinction.

Mr. Hutchinson (P) assumed his Government post a little more than a year ago, having come here from Boston. He has had 20 years of professional photographic experience during which time he worked with some of the leading photographic establishments in the East. Although he is familiar with the whole field of photography, he has devoted most of his time recently to color separation work.

The Royal Photographic Society of Great Britain is widely known throughout the world and has maintained an exclusive membership.

Mr. Hutchinson is a native of Lynn, Mass.

Federal Reserve Union.

Over 150 employes of the Federal Reserve Board have become members of the Federal Credit Union recently chartered there, according to J. Edward Kilgore, treasurer.

"Over half of our 225 employes have become members and we are working to make the credit union serve every employe of the board," Kilgore said.

The Federal Reserve Board organization is the thirteenth Federal Credit Union to be organized among Government employes in the District. With the purpose of providing a systematic plan of saving and of giving lower cost loan service to employes, credit unions accept savings in amounts as small as 25 cents a month and make personal loans at the interest rate of 1 per cent a month or less.

Since the passage of the Federal Credit Union act last year, the number of new unions in Washington has grown rapidly. Federal support has stimulated the work of already existing credit unions organized under the District law, and the success of all these organizations in assisting employes previously burdened with excessive charges on small loans and installment buying has attracted wide attention in Washington and elsewhere.

Flagg, vice president.

Miss Sally Miller defeated Miss Virginia Frietas, 6—0, 7—5, in the finals of the Department of Agriculture women's singles tennis tournament. The winner was presented with a silver trophy.

On The Air Today

The broadcasting industry was prompt in paying tribute to Will Rogers and Wiley Post. Within two hours after the tragedy had been confirmed, CBS had set up a microphone at the Capitol into which Senators and Congressmen poured out their shocked reactions and paid their respects to this country's best beloved comedian and ace of the air.

Ted Church in the brief space of half an hour introduced Senators Connelly, Austin, Metcalf, Barbour, Borah, Byrnes, Joseph Robinson and Ashurst, and Congressmen Will Rogers and Jack Nichols, of Oklahoma.

NBC elected to present a more formal memorial last night at 9, using the Blue network. By early evening arrangements had been completed to present Patrick Hurley, Senators Robinson and Gore, Congressman Nichols Eddie Rickenbacker, Will Hays and Darryl Zanuck, of the motion-picture industry. Ruth Etting, Roscoe Turner, George M. Cohan, Gene Buck, and Fred Stone. Former Vice President Curtis could not be reached by a microphone and contributed a message.

"Last evening (August 13) I turned on the short wave bands and tuned in a London station, but because of static did not get the full station identification. It was 1 a. m. there and they gave a news digest and signed off.

"But the interesting thing was they broadcast about the transformer which exploded at The Washington Post Building. They also praised the paper highly. Of course I read about it then in this morning's Post."

Bill Bivens, operator of WJSV's Saturday night "Barn Loft," will introduce a new feature this week. It's to be known as the Owls Club. The best way to learn about the Owls Club, so far as I know, is to listen this week and get the details from Bivens. It is rumored that one listener heard about it from one of Bill's hillbillies and said he would accept the new idea literally. He's threatened to send an owl to the studio!

Something is coming off at WRC next Monday morning in Gordon Hittenmark's Time-keeper marathon. Anyway he keeps saying "Monday Morning" between discs these mornings.

Donald S. Parris writes to advise that Little Jack Little is back on the air on Saturday nights between 11 and 11:30—from Atlantic City. Inasmuch as WJSV is not carrying this half-hour, Mr. Parris suggests that other Little enthusiasts may wish to fish around a bit for another Columbia station which does. Try WRC, for example. "We have driven to Atlantic City just to dance to Little's music—that's how good we think he is," says Parris.

Fats Waller has a band. The initiation for Washington's audience comes off Sunday night at 11:30 by way of WJSV. He's playing at the Meadowbrook up in New Jersey. And I just learned that Waller is the composer of "Ain't Misbehavin'."

Lionel Barrymore will head the stars to be presented in the Chateau tonight at 8:30, WRC. He will do something from Cooper's "Copperhead" . . . Fred Astaire makes his second appearance in the Hit Parade, WRC, at 7, including a couple more tunes from the new "Top Hat" . . . Catherine Toomey, contralto, is guest for Columbia's Concert Hall, WJSV, at 8, with Howard Barlow's Orchestra.

Culbertson on Bridge

Gamblers Never Gamble.

Many people are surprised to learn that a good gambler "is a man who never gambles." He never takes chances. Likewise, a good bridge player takes no chances when there is any possible way of avoiding them.

The expert who picked up the powerhouse in the following deal knew that the odds were 100 to 1 in favor of the Grand Slam, but he forgot to allow for that possibility and it cost him heavily.

North, Dealer.

The bidding:

North	East	South	West
1♡	Pass	3♣	Pass
3◇	Pass	3♡	Pass
4♡	Pass	7♡	Dbl.
Pass	Pass	Pass

Imagine yourself with the South hand and you will realize how it would feel to hear your partner make an opening bid of one heart. Furthermore, North was vulnerable and South knew there was scarcely a possibility of his having made a psychic bid. It seemed inconceivable North could not hold the two missingAces and enough distributional strength to develop 13 tricks.

South did proceed cautiously to guard against a minimum opening bid and poor distribution on North's part. He bid three clubs over one heart, being forced to use a short suit in order to make a forcing take-out. North responded with three diamonds and this cheered South greatly, since with barren distribution and a bare minimum, North would have bid three no-trump. South now decided he would guard against any chance of the heart suit being "phoney," so he bid merely three hearts. There was no danger attached to this bid, inasmuch as a situation now existed which was forcing to game.

When North bid four hearts, South was no longer in doubt and jumped to seven. West, being quite positive that neither opponent would be void in diamonds, doubled to give East a hint of the opening lead. South, by this time, could see the error of his ways and did not redouble, and when East heeded West's cry and led the ten of diamonds, the Ace provided the single trick which was necessary to defeat the contract.

It was exactly such situations as this for which the Four-Five No-trump Convention was devised, and South could have eliminated all doubt by bidding four notrump over four hearts. North's failure to bid five notrumps at that point would have shown he lacked an Ace, and South could have pulled up to a safe stop at six hearts. The ironic part of the story is that North-South were playing the Four-Five Notrump Convention, but South "knew" the hand was cut and dried for seven and did not even bother to use it.

Chapter XXXII—Dillinger's Double-Cross

In its life and in its demise, the Dillinger mob was little different from any of the others which have paced their way through preceding chapters, excepting a phase of aristocracy.

Certain requisites are necessary for all gangs. There must be men of cruelty and selfishness. There must be hideouts, a few politicians, big or little, attorneys sometimes bargaining in advance with judges in the necessity of surrender. Also there is the crooked gun dealer to transform ordinary automatic pistols into super-automatics and baby machine guns. Then, of course, there is the necessity of certain night club owners whose places are really a blind for their real business, which is that of consorting with criminals, passing their stolen bonds for them or arranging to have kidnap money turned into the "real soft." Of high necessity are the women.

The Dillinger gang had all these advantages; at many places, among them certain night clubs in St. Paul and Louie's place at Fox River Grove, they traveled in exactly the same groove as the other gangs which had gone before them. Nevertheless, they represented a lower stratum of criminality. They did not possess the finesse of the Nash-Miller gang, the Keating and Holden mob, or the one which was to flourish for a time after their passing, the Barker-Karpis outfit. Certainly, there was not the cohesion.

Here was a gang in which honor among thieves was non-existent. The women stole each other's clothing. Even Pat Reilly, with all his worship for the great, could not withstand the temptation to filch in a time of stress. This opportunity came during the Federal raid on Little Bohemia.

He had been sent back to St. Paul to contact one Tommy Gannon, who was to find a hide-out owner and obtain from him $4,000 which was owed Homer Van Meter. Pat's trip was made with Patricia Cherrington. They returned to Little Bohemia just when the shooting was the worst, so they turned their car and hurriedly moved away. A bad road sent them into a ditch and they spent the night in a cornfield. Pat Reilly was badly scared. The whole world seemed filled with Federal men. Every time he saw a motor headlight, fear transformed it into the flashlights of searching special agents. Whenever this occurred, Pat threw from him a parcel wrapped in newspapers. Finally, the woman, a former night-club entertainer, went to pick up the bundle for him. It felt soft, like a bulk of bills. Surreptitiously she opened it and found money. So she took a handful, about $400.

Chiseling Reduced Bank Roll to $300.

Pat was quite upset about that. He had planned to tell Homer Van Meter that he had been able to obtain only $1,000. But it all worked out all right, except for Van Meter. The chase by special agents was a hot one, following the Little Bohemia fight. Contact was not established for several weeks. When at last an emissary of Van Meter's reached Pat, the money had dwindled to $300.

Van Meter was exceedingly unfortunate with money. He had "planted" some $10,000 in two fruit jars at a friend's home in southern Illinois. When the chase cooled, he dropped by for it, and being careless with money, tossed the two fruit jars into the rear of the car where sat Frank Kerwin, a hanger-on. At last they reached St. Paul and Van Meter opened his fruit jars. He found $2,000 missing. For a time he blamed the friends—until at last Frank Kerwin began showing rolls of bills and paying off old debts. Even then, Van Meter could not get revenge. He left Minneapolis one afternoon for St. Paul. That afternoon he was killed by St. Paul police, and his career ended, and the money is still missing.

It was a grand, dishonorable crowd, and that included Baby Face Nelson. The entire gang was afraid of him, even to the women. Everyone looked upon him as a rat among men. After a bank robbery, they inevitably would give him the "honor" of dividing the spoils. Otherwise, they lived in fear that if he was allowed to be on the outside of the group, he would machine-gun them all and take everything.

So, after the Little Bohemia battle, where Baby Face killed his first Federal man, there was little disposition on the part of the gang to harbor him. He was too hot and they told him so. Baby Face then moved for his old hang-outs in California; the Government says that on the way he was protected by 17 persons in various parts of Montana, Nevada and California.

If the routine of gangs had run to form, so had that of the members of the Bureau of Investigation. The usual process of checking acquaintances, enemies, likes and dislikes, hang-outs and hide-outs had proceeded, day and night. Among other things, the special agents had learned that Baby Face Nelson felt himself best protected when he was in the vicinity of a resort near Chicago owned by a politician of more than ordinary power. Baby Face called him by his first name and often had stopped at his hotel. So two special agents took a cottage and waited. One day in late November, they saw a car at a distance containing two men and a woman. One of the males they never had seen before. The other man and the woman they recognized. It was Baby Face Nelson and his wife.

Hurriedly word was sent into Chicago for additional special agents, that the multiple murderer could be surrounded and captured. Speeding at 85 miles an hour, the cars started for the resort. But Baby Face had changed his mind and was himself taking a drive.

Baby Face Nelson was on the prod that afternoon. There is evidence that he recognized some old enemies in a passing car and took a few shots at them, only, however, to desist. A sleek, speeding car was rushing upon him from the rear.
